Byron drafted Werner, his penultimate play, in Pisa between December 18th 1821 and January 20th 1822. Mary Shelley had fair-copied it by the end of January, and Byron corrected her work with care. This was the time of the problems with John Murray over The Liberal and The Vision of Judgement, and Byron, not trusting Murray, sent the manuscript to Moore. But he relented, and it was the last work by him to published by Murray, who brought it out on November 23rd 1822. The original intention had been to publish it in a volume with Heaven and Earth; but Murray changed his mind, or had it changed for him, at the last minute. Heaven and Earth was published in No 2 of The Liberal on January 1st 1823, and John Hunt had expected to have Werner as well, for a later volume: but Murray moved more quickly. A large print-run of the volume containing both works may have been destroyed.

Byron had made a draft of the first act of Werner in November 1815 – just when his marriage was disintegrating, which is perhaps why he didn’t then finish it (it would have been his first play: see first text below). Based on The German’s Tale by Harriet Lee, it may be based also on a dramatic treatment of that story, called The Hungarian, by Georgiana, Duchess of Devonshire (see essay on this website).

The drama

In the source or sources to Werner, a father is made by his son to feel of no further account – neutralised, annihilated in terms of morality and emotion, but without the final resolution (or release) of being murdered too. The son becomes the man the father never could be; but the father experiences the guilt which the son does not feel – as if, without doing the deeds the son has done, he feels that he has incurred the blame for them.

Byron found this thesis interesting. He wrote to Augusta on December 12th 1822:

I am glad that you like “Werner” and care very little who may or may not like it – I know nothing yet of opinions about it – except your own. – The story “the German’s Tale” from which I took it [had] a strange effect upon me when I read it as a boy – and it has haunted me ever since – from some singular conformity between it & my ideas.¹

The play seems to be a Byronic psycho-drama, with different aspects of its creator – some real, some fantasy – clashing endlessly. Its eponymous protagonist is a study in masculine insecurity and loss of pride. Krutzner / Werner / Siegendorf – his multiple signifier an emblem of his shapelessness – is constantly trying to pull rank, conscious that his weak, vacillating character disqualifies him from receiving the respect that he’s demanding. His son, Ulric, is secretly a man of action, the leader of a robber-band whose political aspirations it’s hard to fathom (at once a fantasising Byronic self-image and a typical Byronic cop-out). The father is so weak, that not only can he not commit the central crime (killing Stralenheim), but he can’t wholeheartedly commit the substitute crime (robbing Stralenheim: see Fritz’s comment at II i 54-5). It’s left to his son to do what he daren’t, and to conceal having done so until he has to confess. His confession is an accusation:

Who deprived me of
All power to vindicate myself and race
In open day? By his disgrace which stamped
(It might be) bastardry on me, and on Himself – a felon’s brand! The man who is
At once both warm and weak, invites to deeds
He longs to do, but dare not. Is it strange
That I should act what you could think? We’ve done
With right and wrong; and now must only ponder
Upon effects, not causes. (V ii 46-55)

The villain, Stralenheim, is a nobleman who travels with a Byronic entourage: they include valet, monkeys, a mastiff (I 216), and they have a tendency to rig the accounts (II i 40-54). Like the two heroes, he has to conceal his actions and motives. He has quasi-paternal tenderness for and interest in the younger hero – the one who kills him. This is an ironic development of Conrad’s relationship with Gonsalvo in The Corsair, or Fletcher Christian’s with Torquil in The Island.

The image of “Momus’ lattice” (III i 25), through which, if it existed, one might see a person’s secret thoughts and motives, is important: none of the three male principles can afford to be frank. The comedy of Idenstein’s character – which is Byron’s invention – lies in his motives being always obvious.

In this lack of transparency they contrast with the two heroines, who are innocent, full of love, and need no subterfuge – a sentimentality to contrast with Shakespeare’s Rosalind and Viola, to say nothing of his Lady Macbeth and Cleopatra.

The sources

(1) The German’s Tale and The Hungarian

The play’s one unquestionable source is Harriet Lee, The German’s Tale, in Canterbury Tales (1803) Vol. IV (“Lee” below). Byron acknowledges it in the letter to Augusta. Another source which he may have known is the unpublished play The Hungarian, (“TH” below) by Georgiana, Duchess of Devonshire – “GDD” below (see essay on this website). Georgiana was Caroline Lamb’s aunt.

Here are some notes which may be of use:

1) TH is about one-third of Werner’s length.
2) In TH, Siegendorf being now a public figure, has no need to call himself “Werner” – a word which does not occur in TH. In Lee his nom de voyage is Kruitzner, changed by GDD to Kreutzner. Lee makes him – in his earlier period – a wastrel, a military incompetent and a debauchee, even after his marriage to Josephine. He is redeemed, in Lee, only by his regard for the opinion of his father, Siegendorf Sr.; but Siegendorf Sr., disgusted by his behaviour, alters his will, cutting his morally depraved son out and making his inheritance over to Stralenheim (though this is ambiguous – it might be the right of Siegendorf’s elder son, Conrad – Byron’s Ulric). Neither GDD nor Byron use this idea, which might make Stralenheim more sympathetic, and Werner less so. Werner must be tragic as well as culpable: sexual depravity, as seen in Lee, won’t help this concept. Lee’s protagonist is a coward and a hypocrite: “It was the vice of his character, ever to convert the subjects of self-reproach into those of indignation” (Lee, p.185.) “Siegendorf owed half his faults, and almost all his miseries, to a secret tearing consciousness of error, which he never permitted to rise into reformation” (Lee, p.215.) Byron removes Werner’s sexual culpability and thus his hypocrisy. Byron’s is less sinful Werner than Lee’s. If Lee’s protagonist loses his inheritance, it will be because he is not worthy of it. Byron does not stress this point.

3) In Lee, Stralenheim is given by Siegendorf Sr. the job of watching the movements of his son: Stralenheim’s interest is in dividing father and son, and claiming the Siegendorf inheritance for himself. There may be a political point here, relating to the side on which the son has fought; but the question of which character fought on which side in the Thirty Years’ War is left as ill-defined by Lee as it will be by Byron.

4) The poverty of Siegendorf and Josephine is stressed more by Lee than by Byron, to whom the dynastic dignity of An Inheritance must transcend mere material need.

5) Josephine is Siegendorf’s wife’s name, both in Byron’s play and Lee (in the first, 1815 draft – printed below – she is Josepha). They have an elder son, Conrad, whom Lee introduces unexpectedly, and who is raised by Siegendorf Sr., and a little son called Marcellin. GDD calls the wife Leonora, and gives her an Italian bourgeois background, derived in part from Lee. GDD’s equivalent of Marcellin is called Casimir.

6) The upsetting of Stralenheim’s carriage in the swollen river is in Lee (pp.150-1), and Byron, not in GDD.

7) Idenstein is in Lee the name of a lawyer; the Intendant has no name; Byron conflates two characters for the sake of economy, and makes Idenstein comic.

8) Byron gives them all much greater individuality, and tones of voice. The lower-lifers Idenstein and Fritz (both Byronic inventions) are especially good. All GDD’s characters speak in the same way. Lee’s work seems often – as does Pickersgill’s The Three Brothers supposed subtext for The Deformed Transformed – to be the paraphrase of a novel rather than a real novel.

9) GDD is concerned with spectacular stage-effects, and seems to be writing for the theatre with an eye to pleasing the crowd with costumes, music, pageantry, and scenic grandeur, in which Byron isn’t interested. Byron sums up the pageantry of the Thanksgiving Procession for Peace in Ida’s recollection of it at V i 14-26, and Siegendorf’s recollection at V i 93-135. The style enables GDD to place before the audience one of the tale’s most dramatic moments – the sudden, Banquo’s-Ghost-appearance of The Hungarian in the procession (Lee pp.312-7.) It’s an effect which Byron’s lower-key, lower-budget, “classical” approach has to eschew, for the moment has to be reported (see Werner V i 128-35). What Siegendorf / Werner has to fear from the Hungarian is not clear – for according to him, it was the Hungarian who killed Stralenheim – in his erroneous perspective, the Hungarian should fear him.

10) Byron is crazy for splitting pentameters into three or even four – see III i 165, or IV i 1211. GDD rarely dares more than a two-way split.

11) Byron’s extensive Thirty Years’ War reading results in such historical details as Ulric’s preference for the cruel Catholic Tilly’s march over that of the noble
Protestant King Gustavus Adolphus (Werner IV i 272-5) and Ida’s reaction; these are beyond GDD. The subtlety of scenes like the last one in Werner’s fourth act, in which the protagonist expresses shame, if not guilt, to his confessor, at an act which he did not commit but for which he was in sense responsible, are also beyond GDD. There is no precedent for the scene in Lee, though Lee’s Siegendorf does give the stolen money to a convent (Lee, p.278.)

12) GDD brings on young Casimir, Conrad’s little brother, in II i; he is a version of little Marcellin in Lee. GDD refers to him in the play’s last speech as a hope for the future. Byron has no equivalent to Casimir or Marcellin.

13) Siegendorf’s snatching up the knife (Werner I i 621) is from Lee (p.163).

14) Both plays are more vivid than their source novella, which is slow, artless, and prolix.

15) One of the best of Lee’s passages (uncharacteristically detailed in the way it’s imagined) is the climactic one in which Siegendorf / Werner enters Stralenheim’s chamber via an unexpected secret passage. See I 748n. In doing right, Siegendorf fails to do “the manly, Macbethy” thing, and kill the man who stands in his way, substituting the less manly, more practical, but much meaner thing of stealing some (not all) of his gold. This ambiguity is well captured in Lee. It is important to Byron (see Werner II ii 130-49), less so to GDD, who passes it over quickly. What the father dare not do, the son does.

16) Calling the banditti whom Ulric leads “Black Bands” occurs only in Werner – more evidence of Byron’s greater knowledge of seventeenth-century Europe.

17) GDD will not allow Conrad to confess to the murder of Stralenheim – Emma’s father – except in the most veiled way, immediately before he dies. Byron’s Ida faints (V i 60-1) upon hearing that her father’s blood is on Ulric’s hand – though how she at once intuits the circumstances by which it came there is a great mystery.

(2) Francis Hare-Naylor’s History of Germany

Francis Hare-Naylor (1753-1815), was a democrat, and a friend of Georgiana, Duchess of Devonshire. Byron refers to him in a note to Don Juan, XIV, st.48:

Sir W[illiam]. D[rummond]. was a great gamester. Coming one day to the club of which he was a member, he was observed to look melancholy. “What is the matter, Sir William?” cried Hare of facetious memory. “Ah!” replied Sir W[illiam]. “I have just lost poor Lady D.” “Lost? What at – Quinze or Hazard?” was the consolatory rejoinder of the querist. – –

Hare’s posthumous Civil and Military History of Germany from the landing of Gustavus to the Conclusion of the Treaty of Westphalia (John Murray, 2 vols., 1816) was both acquired and sold by Byron in the year of its publication: it is item 243 in the 1816 sale catalogue. Unless he received an advance copy, Byron could not have known it when he started his draft of Act I in November 1815. It deals exclusively with the Thirty Years’ War. From it Byron would have learned an outline of the conflict, and of its leading personalities. Many of the play’s proper names not borrowed from Lee are borrowed from it (Byron having no German). I have noted where each name is first introduced. I have not so far found “Carl”, “Fritz”, “Meister”, “Erick”, “Ludwig”, “Herman”, “Waldorf”, or “Peter”, but am not surprised at their absence. Hare-Naylor’s is the only history of Germany in any of Byron’s book-sale catalogues.

(3) Coxe’s History of the House of Austria

William Coxe (“Archdeacon Coxe” at Don Juan III 92, 8), published his History of the House of Austria in 1807. Byron possessed a copy (1813 sale catalogue, item 132), sold it in 1816 (1816 sale catalogue, item 153), and then, on the continent, bought a French translation (Histoire de la Maison d’Autriche, 5 vol. Par, 1810), which is item 38 in the 1827 sale catalogue. Pages 1-246 of the fourth volume are devoted to the Thirty Years’ War, dealing with it in a more economical way than Hare-Naylor.

Werner and Byron’s insecure sense of aristocracy

Byron inherited his barony, not from his father, but from his great-uncle, when his cousin died. Because of an eighteenth-century lawyer’s mistake, he was able to sell his inheritance, Newstead Abbey – and did sell it – in a way which very few aristocrats could.

All his life he bit his fingernails. He was extremely self-conscious.

… it [The German’s Tale] has haunted me … – from some singular conformity between it & my ideas.²

But he doesn’t say what the ideas are, and, if Augusta asked, we have no trace of it. Harriet Lee’s story is about a man who does not think he deserves the respect an aristocrat should receive, but finds no-one to share his self-evaluation:

The occasion was critical, and loudly forbade all delicacy and delay: yet could he not resolve on re-entering Prague without experiencing a sensation that shook his very soul. The ill-omened hour in which he had quitted it returned to his imagination in vivid colours; and a thousand painful as well as humiliating recollections of the past started forward, to blend with a sort of half-apprehension from the novelty and strangeness of the future. He had no longer a father – hardly a country – still less a friend! – expatriated as he had been, and shook as the nation was to its very foundations, he felt that he should at best be recognised by it without being known – allowed without being claimed. Under this impression, he entered the gates like a man who expects them every moment to be closed against him; till well-remembered and familiar spots once more saluting his eye, he at length began to breathe freely: to rouse from that state of agitation which for a while rendered all objects visionary; to feel that he was still the son of Count Siegendorf; and to assure himself that the sorrow and degradation of the past was to be ranked henceforward among those fearful chimeras conjured up by the indifference of youth, and which fade of themselves before the season of maturity.³

²: BLJ X 55.
This is the subtext of Siegendorf’s / Werner’s blusters and fears. The play’s three principal male characters – Werner, Ulric, and Stralenheim – are obsessed with the aristocratic inheritance which, all three feel, gives them a qualitative superiority to the rest of the human race. Werner himself spurns the idea of being “a Hanseatic burgher” (I i 142). Stralenheim despises Werner for having lived “... amidst commerce-fetching burghers, / And dabbling merchants, in a mart of Jews” (II ii 391-2).

This arrogance is commented on at intervals by other characters, in their different idioms. Firstly, Idenstein is crudely satirical:

We know not if his Excellency’s dead
Or no; your noblemen are hard to drown,
As it is fit that men in office should be,
But what is certain is, that he has swallowed
Enough of the Oder to have burst two peasants … (I i 219-23)

Then Josephine is humane and compassionate, contrasting this north European obsession with the more fluid state of Italian class relations:

Even here, in this remote, unnamed, dull spot,
The dimmest in the district’s map, exist
The insolence of wealth in poverty
O’er something poorer still – the pride of rank
In servitude, o’er something still more servile;
And vice in misery affecting still
A tattered splendour. What a state of being!
In Tuscany, my own dear sunny land,
Our nobles were but citizens and merchants,
Like Cosmo. We had evils, but not such
As these … (I i 7009)

Lastly, Gabor (using an idea from Walter Scott: see note), is egalitarian:

There goes my noble, feudal, self-willed baron!
Epitome of what brave chivalry
The preux chevaliers of the good old times
Have left us. Yesterday he would have given
His lands (if he hath any), and, still dearer,
His sixteen quarterings, for as much fresh air
As would have filled a bladder, while he lay
Gurgling and foaming half way through the window
Of his o’erset and water-logged conveyance,
And now he storms at half a dozen wretches
Because they love their lives too! (II i 323-33)

No echoes of these sentiments are to be found in either Lee or GDD.
The three men destroy one another in their pursuit of the illusion of aristocracy which, Byron implies, is just another “Marsh’s meteor-lamp” (PoC 35) planted in men’s heads to lead them astray.
Contemporary reactions

Not everyone liked Werner when it first appeared. Byron was accused of many literary sins, not least the way he’d used Harriet Lee’s The German’s Tale. The British Critic broadened this accusation into something more damaging still:

We formally charge Lord Byron with being under various shapes, in various ways, and in various degrees from the first canto of Childe Harold down to Werner – a Plagiary! We say he has been a plagiary of manner, feeling and style, a plagiary of incident, story and character, a plagiary of thoughts, passion and words! We say he has imitated, to use very soft language, Madame de Staël; he has imitated Mrs Radcliffe; he has imitated principally and most constantly Southey, Coleridge and Wordsworth – and therefore he abuses them,

“As if his whole vocation
Were endless imitation”.

The Edinburgh Monthly Review found that Byron’s exile was making him losing touch with his roots:

The author’s absence from England must tend to sap his knowledge of the language: we were therefore not surprised to find in his work inaccuracies, foreign idioms, and habitual misconceptions of common phraseology. But we were not altogether prepared for such examples of awkwardness and vulgarism as these: —

“What knows? Our son
May have returned back to his grandsire.”

The reviewer lists six more solecisms of one kind or another, implying that they are not the only ones.

A general sense that the play’s language was imprecise didn’t, however, prevent Siegendorf from becoming Seigendorf, and, most strangely, Kruitzner metamorphosing into Ruitzner.

The Monthly Review took Byron to task for his monosyllabic line-endings:

… we could cite above fourscore lines which terminate most unmajestically and unmetrically with propositions [sic], adverbs, conjunctions, or other monosyllabic “small fry” of language; cutting through a line most needlessly and barbarously, where no division ought to be made on account of emphasis or construction or sense, but because the foot-rule has been supposed to mark off a sufficient quantity of syllables …

… though none mentioned his inconsistent use of split pentameters.

At least two reviews commented on the way, between his third and fourth acts, Byron violates those very unities of which, in Faliero, Sardanapalus, and The Foscari, he had seemed so protective. The European Magazine, without pointing out the inconsistency, Henry Harte Milman wrote that “The fourth act is the most injudicious violation of the unity of time and place that can well be imagined”. But the Edinburgh Monthly Review referred to “A formidable breach of those unities to which Lord Byron had so lately and ceremoniously pledged himself”. Many reviewers printed extracts from Lee next to extracts from Byron, to show the closeness; and many did what others had done in reviews of Byron’s plays, and printed the verse as prose, saying there was no difference:

7: The British Critic, at RR I p.321 et seq.

As poetry, this performance is of the humblest order; feeble, broken, and parenthetic. Ninety-nine lines out of hundred are mere prose, but without the clearness and common sense of prose.

No consensus seemed possible. The Examiner was sympathetic towards what it saw as a promising development:

We wish, that having already dispensed with the unities, Lord Byron would take another stride, and occasionally blend tragedy and comedy with the license of Shakspeare [sic]. Could the Author of Don Juan entirely fail?

But more representative of the coldness – motivated in part, as can be seen, by politics – was The Monthly Censor: “his cockney auxiliary” is Leigh Hunt, author of the review just quoted:

… the verse is his Lordship’s own; and worthy of his cockney auxiliary. The whole production is flat, vulgar, dreary and contemptible.

Stage history

Werner was the most popular of Byron’s plays in the nineteenth century – not that that’s saying much. It was first performed, in New York, in 1828; Macready played it seventeen times in London in 1830-1, and revived it in 1833, and at intervals between then and 1851, totalling seventy-seven performances. He re-wrote the play’s ending, and had Ulric arrested. Samuel Phelps performed it fifty-eight times from 1844 to 1878, and Henry Irving – for one matinee only, we have to admit – in 1887. Ellen Terry was Josephine, and the murder of Stralenheim by Ulric was staged.

The play’s twentieth century performance history is negligible.

This first text here is a modernised and repunctuated version of the early draft, which dates from the time when Byron was working at Parisina and The Siege of Corinth. The ideal marital relationship between Werner and Josepha contrasts with what we know was the far-from-ideal state of Byron’s own marriage at this time.

The sketch shows Byron already to be master of the melodramatic, heavily-signalled style of writing which the rhetorical acting manner and large auditoria of the day demanded.

Byron did not have this sketch by him when he wrote the second, complete version of the play, though he did ask Hobhouse to find it and send it to him. (BLJ IX 81, 88).

ACT I scene i.

A ruinous chateau on the Silesian frontier of Bohemia.

Jospeha:

The storm is at its height! How the wind howls
Like an unearthly voice through these lone chambers,
And the rain patters on the flapping casement,
Which quivers in its frame! The night is starless,
Yet cheerly, Werner – still our hearts are warm;
The tempest is without – or should be so,
For we are sheltered here, where Fortune’s clouds
May roll all harmless o’er us, as the wrath
Of these wild elements, that menace now,
Yet do not reach us.

Werner (without attending, and walking disturbedly, speaking to himself):

No – ’tis past – ’tis blighted –

The last faint hope to which my withered fortune
Clung with a feeble and a fluttering grasp,
Yet clung convulsively – for ’twas the last –
Is broken with the rest – would that my heart were!
But there is pride and passion’s war within,
Which give my breast vitality to suffer
As it has suffered through long years till now:
My father’s wrath extends beyond the grave,
And haunts me in the shape of Stralenheim!
He revels in my father’s palace – I –

Exiled – disherited – a nameless outcast –

Werner pauses.

My boy too – where and what is he? My father
Might well have limited his curse to me,
If that my heritage had passed to Ulric,14
I had not mourned my own less happy lot –
No – No – all’s past – all torn away!

14: In Lee, the son is named Conrad, a name B. had used already in The Corsair.
Josepha: Dear Werner!

Oh banish these discomfortable thoughts
That thus contend within you; we are poor –
So we have ever been – but I remember
The time when thy Josepha’s smile could turn
Thy heart to hers, despite of any ill!
So let it now – alas! you hear me not.

Think me not churlish, sweet; I am not well.
My brain is hot and busy – long fatigue
And last night’s watching have oppressed me much.

Josepha: Then get thee to thy couch – I do perceive
In thy pale cheek and in thy bloodshot eye
A strange distemperature; nay, as a boon
I do entreat thee to thy rest –

Werner: My rest!

Well – be it so. Goodnight.

Josepha: Thy hand is burning.
I will prepare a potion. Peace be with thee;
Tomorrow’s dawn, I trust, will find thee healthful,
And then our Ulric may, perchance …

Werner: There ’tis!

Our Ulric! Thine and mine – our only boy!
Curse on his father and his father’s sire
(For if it is so, I will render back
A curse that Heaven will hear as well as his).
Our Ulric, by his father’s fault or folly,
And by my father’s unrelenting pride,
Is at this hour perchance undone – this night,
That shelters us, may shower its wrath on him,
A homeless beggar for his parents’ sin –
Thy sin and mine! Thy child and mine atones!
Our Ulric – Woman! I’ll to no bed tonight –
There is no pillow for my thoughts.

Josepha: What words –
What fearful words are these? What may they mean?

Werner: Look on me – thou hast known me hitherto
As an oppressed, but yet a humble creature,
By birth predestined to the yoke I’ve borne –
Till now I’ve borne it patiently, at least
In bitter silence; but the hour is come
That should and shall behold me as I was
And ought again to be –

Josepha: I know not what
Thy mystery may tend to, but my fate,
My heart, my will, my love, are linked with thine,
And I would share thy sorrow – lay it open!

Werner: Thou seest the son of Count … but let it pass –
I have forfeited the name in wedding thee.
That fault of many faults, a father’s pride,
Proclaimed the last and worst – and from that hour
He disavowed – disherited – debased –
A wayward son – ’tis a long tale – too long –
And I am heartsick of the heavy thought.

Josepha: Oh I could weep, but that were little solace.
Yet tell the rest – or if thou wilt not, say,
Yet say – why through long years from me withheld
This fearful secret that hath gnawed thy soul?

Werner: Why, had it not been base to call on thee
For patience and for pity – to awake
The thirst of grandeur in thy gentle spirit –
To tell thee what thou should’st have been – the wife
Of one in power, birth, wealth pre-eminent –
Then sudden quailing in that lofty tone
To bid thee soothe thy husband – peasant Werner?

Josepha: I would thou wert indeed the peasant Werner,
For then thy soul had been of calmer mould,
And suited to thy lot –

Werner: Was it not so?
Beneath a humble name and garb, the which
My youthful riot and a father’s frown
Too justly fixed upon me, had compelled
My bowed-down spirit to assume too well,
Since it deceived the world, myself, and thee.
I linked my lot irrevocably with thine,
And I have loved thee deeply – long and dearly,
Even as I love thee still – but these late crosses,
And most of all the last, have maddened me,
And I am wild and wayward, as in youth
Ere I beheld thee –

Josepha: Would thou never hadst,
Since I have been a blight upon thy hope,
And marred alike the present and the future.

Werner: Yet say not so – for all that I have known
Of true and calm content, of love, of peace,
Has been with thee and from thee. Wert thou not,
I were a lonely and self-loathing thing.
Ulric has left us – all save thou have left me:
Father, and son, fortune, fame, power, ambition,
The ties of being – the high soul of man –
All save the long remorse, the consciousness,
The curse of living on, regretting life
Misspent in miserably gazing upward
While others soared – away! I’ll think no more!

Josepha: But Ulric – wherefore didst thou let him leave
His home and us? ’Tis now three weary years –

Werner (interrupting her quickly): Since my hard father half relenting sent
The offer of a scanty stipend – which
I needs must earn, by rendering up my son,
Fool that I was – I thought this quick compliance,
And never more assuming in myself
The haught name of my house, would soften him,
And for our child secure the heritage
Forfeit in me forever. Since that hour,
Till the last year, the wretched pittance came,
Then ceased with every tidings of my son
And sire. Till late I heard the last had ceased
To live, and unforgiving died – Oh God –

Josepha: Was it for this our Ulric left us so?
Thou didst deceive me then – he went not forth
To join the legions of Count Tilly’s power?\(^{15}\)

Werner: I know not – he had left my father’s castle
Some months before his death – but why? – but why?
Left it as I did ere his birth – perchance,
Like me, an outcast. Old age had not made
My father meeker – and my son, alas!
Too much his sire resembled –

Josepha: Yet there’s comfort.
Restrain thy wandering spirit – Ulric cannot
Have left his native land – thou dost not know,
Though it seem angrily – thy sire and he
In anger parted. Hope is left us still.

Werner: The best hope that I ever held in youth
When every pulse was life – each thought a joy,
Yet not irrationally sanguine, since
My birth bespake high thoughts – hath lured and left me.
I will be not a dreamer in mine age,
The hunter of a shadow – let boys’ hope!
Of hope I now know nothing, but the name –
And that’s a sound which jars upon my heart.
I’ve wearied thee. Good night, my patient Love!

Josepha: I must not leave thee thus, my husband, friend!
My heart is rent in twain for thee – I scarce
Dare greet thee as I would, lest that my love
Should seem officious and ill-timed – ’tis early,
Yet rest were as a healing balm to thee;
Then once again – goodnight.

Voice without: What ho! Lights!

Act I scene ii.

Josepha: What noise is that? ’tis nearer – hush – they knock!

A knocking heard at the gate. Werner starts.

Werner (aside): It may be that the bloodhounds of the villain
Who long has tracked me have approached at last;

\(^{15}\): Tilly – a catholic general in the Thirty Years’ War. The first intimation that the play is set at that time.
I’ll not be taken tamely –

Josepha: 'Twas the voice,
The single voice of some lone traveller.
I’ll to the door –

Werner: No! stay thou here again!

Knocking repeated. Werner opens the door.

Well, Sir – your pleasure?

Enter Carl the Bavarian.

Carl: Thanks, most worthy Sir.
My pleasure for tonight depends on yours.
I’m weary, wet, and way-worn – without shelter,
Unless you please to grant it.

Josepha: You shall have it, 10
Such as this ruinous mansion may afford.
'Tis spacious – but too cold and crazy now
For Hospitality’s more cordial welcome.
But as it is, 'tis yours.

Werner (to his wife): Why say ye so?
At once such hearty greeting to a stranger,
At such a lonely hour too.

Josepha (in reply to Werner): Nay – he’s honest;
There is trust-worthiness in his blunt looks.

Werner (to Josepha): “Trustworthiness in looks!” – I’ll trust no looks.
I look into men’s faces for their age,
Not for their actions – had he Adam’s brow,
Open and goodly as before the fall,
I’ve lived too long to trust the frankest aspect.
(to Carl): Whence come you, Sir?

Carl: From Frankfurt, on my way
To my own country. I’ve a companion, too;
He tarries now behind. An hour ago,
On reaching that same river on your frontier,
We found it swoln by storms. A stranger’s carriage,
Despite the current – drawn by sturdy mules –
Essayed to pass, and nearly reached the middle
Of that which was the ford in gentler weather,
When down came the driver, carriage, mules, and all.
You may suppose the worthy lord within
Fared ill enough: worse still he might have suffered,
But that my comrade and myself rushed in
And with main strength and some good luck beside Dislodged and saved him. He’ll be here anon –
His equipage by this time is at Dresden.
I left it floating that way.

Werner: Where is he?
Carl: Hitherward on his way, even like myself.
We saw the light, and made for the nearest shelter.
You'll not deny us for a single night –
You've room enough, methinks – and this vast ruin
Will not be worse for three more guests.

Werner: Two more.
And thou? – well – be it so. (aside) (Tonight will soon
Be overpast – they shall not stay tomorrow.)
Know you the name of him you saved?

Carl: Not I.
I think I heard him called a Baron Something,
But was too chill to stay and hear his titles.
You know they're sometimes tedious in the reckoning.
If counted over by the noble wearer.
Has't any wine? I'm wet – stung to the marrow.
My comrade waited to escort the baron;
They will be here anon – they too want cheering.
I'll taste for them, if it please you, courteous host.

Josepha: Such as our vintage is, shall give you welcome –
I'll bring you some anon.

Carl (looking round): A goodly mansion!
And has been nobly tenanted, I doubt not –
This worn magnificence some day has shone
On light hearts and long revels; those torn banners
Have waved o'er courtly guests, and yon huge lamp
High blazed through many a midnight. I could wish
My lot had led me here in those gay times.
Your days, my host, must pass but heavily.
Are you the vassal of these ancient chiefs,
Whose heir wastes elsewhere their fast melting hoards,
And placed to keep these cobwebs company?

Werner: (who has been absorbed in thought till the latter part of his speech):
A vassal! – I a vassal? Who accosts me
With such familiar question? (checks himself and says aside):
Down, startled pride!
Have not long years of wretchedness yet quenched thee,
And, suffering evil, wilt thou start at scorn?
(to Carl): Sir, if I boast no birth – and as you see
My state bespeaks none – still no being breathes
Who calls me slave or servant. Like yourself
I am a stranger here – a lonely guest
But for a time on sufferance, on my way
From – a far distant city. Sickness seized,
And long detained me in the neighbouring hamlet;
The Intendant of the owner of this castle,
Then uninhabited, with kind intent
Permitted me to wait returning health
Within these walls, more sheltered than the cott
Of humble peasants.

Carl: Worthy Sir, your mercy!
I meant not to offend you – plain of speech
And blunt in apprehension, I do judge
Men’s station from their seeming, but themselves
From acts alone; you bid me share your shelter
And I am bound to you – and had you been
The lowliest vassal, had not thanked you less
Than I do now, believing you his better –
Perhaps my own superior.

Werner: What imports it? 90
What – who I am, or whence, you’re welcome – sit.
You shall have cheer anon.

_Walks disturbedly aside._

Carl (to himself): Here’s a strange fellow –
Wild, churlish, angry – why, I know not – reckon not.
Would that the wine were come – my doublet’s wet,
But my throat dry as summer’s drought in deserts.
Ah – here it sparkles!

Enter Josepha with wine in a flask and a cup. As she pours it out a voice is heard without, calling at a distance. Werner starts: Josepha listens tremulously.

Werner: That voice – that voice – hark!
No – no – ’tis silent. Sir – I say – that voice –
Whose is it? – speak!

Carl (drinking unconcernedly): Whose is it? faith – I know not,
And yet ’tis my companion’s. He’s like you,
And does not care to tell his name and station. 100

_The voice again, and nearer._

Josepha: ’Tis his – I knew it – Ulric! Ulric! Ulric!

_She drops the wine and rushes out._

Carl: The flask’s unhurt, but every drop is spilt.
Confound the voice, I say – would he were dumb;
And, faith, to me he has been nearly so –
A silent and unsocial travelling mate.

Werner (stands in agitation, gazing towards the door): If it be he – I cannot move to meet him;
Yes – it must be so – there is no such voice
That so could sound and shake me – he is here,
And I am ...

_Enter Stralenheim._

Werner (turns and sees him): A curse upon thee, stranger!
Where didst thou learn a tone so like my boy’s,
Thou mockbird of my hopes? A curse upon thee!
Out, out, I say – thou shalt not harbour here!

Stralenheim: What means the peasant? Knows he not unto whom
He dares address this language?

Carl:       Noble Sir,
Pray heed him not – he’s frenzy’s next door neighbour,
And full of these strange starts and causeless jarrings.

Werner: Oh, that long wished-for voice! I dreamed of it,
And then it did elude me – then and now.

Enter Ulric and Josepha. Werner falls on his neck.

Oh God, forgive me! for thou didst not forget me,
Although I murmured! ’Tis – it is – my son!

Josepha: Aye, ’tis dear Ulric – yet methinks he’s changed too.
His cheek is tanned, his frame more firmly knit –
That scar too – dearest Ulric – I do fear me
Thou hast been battling with these heretics,
And that’s a Swedish token on thy brow.¹⁶

Ulric: My heart is glad with yours – we meet like those
Who never would have parted: of the past
You shall know more anon. But here’s a guest
That asks a gentle welcome – noble Baron,
My father’s silence looks discourtesy,
Yet must I plead his pardon – ’tis his love
Of a long truant that has rapt him thus
From hospitable greeting. You’ll be seated –
And, Father, we will sup like famished hunters.

Josepha goes out.

Stralenheim: I have much need of rest – no more refreshment.
Were all my people housed within the hamlet,
Or can they follow?

Ulric:       Not tonight, I fear.
They stayed, in hope the damaged cabriole¹⁷
Might with the dawn of day have such repairs
As circumstance admits of.

Carl:       Nay – that’s hopeless.
They must not only mend, but draw it, too:
The mules are drowned – a murrain on them both!
One kicked me as I would have helped him on.

Stralenheim: It is most irksome to me, this delay.
I was for Prague on business of great moment.

Werner: For Prague, Sir – say you?

Stralenheim: Yes, my host – for Prague;
And these vile floods and villainous crossroads

¹⁶: Swedes were on the protestant side. As in the 1822 version, Werner and his family are Catholic.
Steal my time from its uses. But – my people – Where do they shelter?\textsuperscript{18}

Ulric: In the boatman’s shed, Near to the ferry – you mistook the ford, 'Tis higher to the right. Their entertainment Will be but rough – but 'tis a single night, And they had best be guardians of the baggage. The shed will hold the weather from their sleep, The wood fire warm them – and for beds, a cloak Is swansdown to a seasoned traveller; It has been mine for many a moon, and may Tonight, for aught it recks me.

Stralenheim: And tomorrow I must be on my journey; and betimes. It is not more than three days travel hence To Mansfeldt Castle –

Werner and Ulric: Mansfeldt Castle!\textsuperscript{19}

Stralenheim: Aye – For thither tends my progress; so betimes, Mine host, I would be stirring – think of that, And let me find my couch of rest at present.

Werner: You shall, Sir – but – to Mansfeldt –

\textbf{Ulric stops his father and says aside to him:}

\emph{Silence, Father!}

(to Stralenheim): My father, Sir, was born not far from Prague, And knows its environs – and when he hears The name endearèd to him by native thoughts, He would ask of it and its habitants.\textsuperscript{170} You will excuse his plain blunt mode of question.

Stralenheim: Indeed – perchance then he may aid my search. Pray, know you aught of one named Werner – who (But he no doubt has passed through many names), Lived long in Hamburg? and has thence been Into Silesia – and not far from hence? But there we lost him. He who can disclose Aught of him, or his hiding place, will find Advantage in revealing it.

Ulric: Why so, Sir?

Stralenheim: There are strong reasons to suspect this man Of crimes against the state – league with the Swedes, And other evil acts of moment: he Who shall deliver him bound hand and foot

\textsuperscript{18}: In the 1822 version B. makes Stralenheim’s retinue resemble his own, with “A monkey, and a mastiff – and a valet” (I i 216).

\textsuperscript{19}: Ernst von Mansfeldt was a famous commander of Palatinate forces in the Thirty Years’ War: Hare-Naylor, I 90.

\textsuperscript{20}: Compare On this day, 29-30: \textit{Tread those reviving passions down, / Unworthy Manhood ...}
Will benefit his country and himself –
I will reward him doubly, too.

Ulric: You know him?
Stralenheim: He never met my eyes – but circumstance
Has led me to near knowledge of the man.
He is a villain – and an enemy
To all men – most to me – if earth contain him,
He shall be found and fettered. I have hopes,
By traces which tomorrow will unravel,
A fresh clue to his lurking spot is nigh.

Carl: And if I find it, I will break the thread.
What, all the world against one luckless wight?
And he a fugitive? I would I knew him.

Ulric: You’d help him to escape – is it not so?
Carl: I would indeed.
Ulric: The greater greenhorn you!
I would secure him; nay, I will do so.

Stralenheim: If it be so, my gratitude for aid,
And rescue of my life from the wild waters,
Will double in its strength and its requital.
Your father too perhaps can help our search.

Werner: I turn a spy? – no – not for Mansfeldt Castle,
And all the broad domain it frowns upon!

Stralenheim: Mansfeldt again! – you know it, then? Perchance
You also know the story of its lords?

Werner: Whate’er I know, there is no bribe of thine
Can serve me to the crooked path thou pointest.
The chamber’s ready which your rest demands.

Stralenheim (aside): ’Tis strange – this peasant’s tone is wondrous high –
His air imperious – and his eye shines out
As wont to look command with a quick glance.
His garb befits him not – why, he may be
The man I look for! Now I look again,
There is the very lip – short curling lip –
And the o’erjutting eye – brow dark and large –
And the peculiar wild variety
Of feature – even unto the viper’s eye
Of that detested race and its descendant,
Who stands alone between me and a power
Which princes gaze at with unquiet eyes.
This is no peasant – but whate’er he be,
Tomorrow shall secure him, and unfold.

Ulric: It will not please you, Sir, then, to remain
With us beyond tomorrow?

Stralenheim: Nay – I do not say so. There is no haste;
And now I think again – I’ll tarry here,
Perhaps until the floods abate – we’ll see.
In the meantime, to my chamber – so – goodnight.

Exit with Werner.
Werner: This way, Sir.
Carl: And I to mine – pray, where are we to rest? We’ll sup within.
Ulric: What matters where? There’s room.
Carl: I would fain see my way through this vast ruin. Come, take the lamp, and we’ll explore together.
Josepha (meeting them): And I will with my son.
Ulric: Nay, stay, dear Mother; These chilly damps, and the cold rush of winds Fling a rough palesen o’er thy delicate cheek. Yet thou seem’st lovely in thy sickliness Of most transparent beauty – but it grieves me. Nay, tarry here – by the blaze of the bright hearth; I will return anon, and we have much To listen and impart. Come, Carl – we’ll find Some gorgeous canopy, and thence unroost Its present bedfellows, the bats – and thou Shalt slumber underneath a velvet cloud That mantles o’er the couch of some dead countess.

Exeunt Carl and Ulric.

Josepha (sola): It was my joy to see him – nothing more I should have said – which sent my gush of blood Back on my full heart with a dancing tide. It was my weary hope’s unthought fulfilment – My agony of mother21 – feelings curdled At once in gathering rapture, which did change My cheek into the hue of fainting Nature. I should have answered thus, and yet I could not, For though ’twas true, it was not all the truth – I have much suffered in the thought of Werner’s Late deep distemper of mind and fortunes, Which since have almost driven him into frenzy; And though that I would soothe, not share, such passions, And show not how they shake me; when alone, I feel them prey upon me by reflection, And want the very solace I bestowed, And which, it seems, I cannot give and have. Ulric must be my comforter. His father’s Hath long been the most melancholy soul That ever hovered o’er the verge of madness, And better had he leapt into its gulf; Though to the mad thoughts are realities, Yet they can play with sorrow – and live on; But with the mind of consciousness and care The body wears to ruin, and the struggle, 21: Compare King Lear, II iv 55: O, how this mother swells up toward my heart!

However long, is deadly. He is lost,
And all around him tasteless; in his mirth,
His very laughter moves me oft to tears,
And I have turned to hide them – for in him,
As he is now, smiles are unnatural –
As sunshine glittering o’er unburied bones.
Soft – he is here.

Werner: Josepha – where is Ulric?
Josepha: Gone with the other stranger, to gaze o’er
These shattered corridors, and spread themselves
A pillow with their mantles in the least ruinous;
I must replenish the diminished hearth
In the inner chamber – the repast is ready,
And Ulric will be here again.

A Tragedy
by Lord Byron

To

PREFACE

THE following drama is taken entirely from the “German’s Tale, Kruitzner”, published many years ago in “Lee’s Canterbury Tales”; written (I believe) by two sisters, of whom one furnished only this story and another, both of which are considered superior to the remainder of the collection. I have adopted the characters, plan, and even the language, of many parts of this story. Some of the characters are modified or altered, a few of the names changed, and one character (Ida of Stralenheim) added by myself: but in the rest the original is chiefly followed. When I was young (about fourteen, I think) I first read this tale, which made a deep impression upon me; and may, indeed, be said to contain the germ of much that I have since written. I am not sure that it ever was very popular; or, at any rate its popularity has since been eclipsed by that of other great writers in the same department. But I have generally found that those who had read it, agreed with me in their estimate of the singular power of mind and conception which it develops. I should also add conception, rather than execution; for the story might, perhaps, have been more developed with greater advantage. Amongst those whose opinions agreed with mine upon this story, I could mention some very high names; but it is not necessary, nor indeed of any use; for every one must judge according to their own feelings. I merely refer the reader to the original story, that he may see to what extent I have borrowed from it; and am not unwilling that he should find much greater pleasure in perusing it than the drama which is founded upon its contents.

I had begun a drama upon this tale so far back as 1815 (the first I ever attempted, except one at thirteen years old, called “Ulric and Ilvina”, which I had sense enough to burn), and had nearly completed an act, when I was interrupted by circumstances. This is somewhere amongst my papers in England; but as it has not been found,\textsuperscript{23} I have re-written the first, and added the subsequent acts.

The whole is neither intended, nor in any shape adapted, for the stage\textsuperscript{24} of England or any other country. It may seem unnecessary to add this; but having seen a poem of mine never intended for representation dragged, in spite of my remonstrances, upon the theatres of more than one nation,\textsuperscript{25} I trust it will not be deemed impertinent if I once more repeat my protest against a gross folly which may injure me, and benefit no one. If it be understood that all “dramatic” writing is generally intended for the stage

\textsuperscript{23}: The first text above is an edition of this draft.
\textsuperscript{25}: B. refers to \textit{Marino Faliero}, staged against his wishes in 1821 in London, Paris, and New York.
– I deny it. With the exception of Shakespeare (or Tate, Cibber, and Thompson under his name), not one in fifty plays of our dramatists is ever acted, however much they may be read. Only one of Massinger – none of Ford – none of Marlowe – one of Ben Jonson – none of Webster – none of Heywood: and even in comedy, Congreve is rarely acted, and that only in one of his plays. Neither is Joanna Baillie. I am far from attempting to raise myself to a level with the least, even, of these names: I only wish to be exempted from a stage which is not theirs. Perhaps the whole question is best treated in Mr Lamb’s essay upon the effects of dramatic representation on an intelligent author. If his remarks are just with regard to the plays of Shakespeare himself, they apply a hundredfold to those of his inferiors.

Feb. 1822.

The list B. now makes shows how few of the dramatists now recognised as standard were in the repertoire in his day, and how hard it was therefore to differentiate between fair and false reputations. He has seen very little of the work of the playwrights in his list.

26: Nahum Tate (1652-1715); the only dramatic text of his which survives in performance is the libretto to Purcell’s Dido and Aeneas. Colley Cibber (1671-1757), famous for mutilating Shakespeare; none of his plays survive in the repertoire. James Thompson (1700-48), author of The Seasons; he wrote a tragedy called Sophonisba, never now performed.

27: Philip Massinger (1583-60) author of A New Way to Pay Old Debts (see BLJ VI 192, VI 206, VII 194, and TVOJ, 105, 8).

28: John Ford (1586-60?) author of ‘Tis Pity She’s a Whore (see BLJ III 199 and VI 95).

29: Christopher Marlowe (1564-83); his plays are now often performed. B.’s Manfred derives from it in part – see essay on this website.

30: Ben Jonson (1572-1637); his plays, also, are now often performed. The one B. refers to is Every Man in his Humour. B. quotes from it (“by the foot of Pharaoh”), at BLJ III 122. See also BLJ VIII 57.

31: John Webster (1580-1634), author of The White Devil and The Duchess of Malfi, both now often performed. B. refers to The White Devil at BLJ VII 122-4; never to The Duchess of Malfi.

32: Thomas Heywood (1573?-1641) author of A Woman Killed with Kindness, sometimes revived. This is B.’s only reference to him.

33: William Congreve (1670-1729); author of Love for Love and The Way of the World, both often revived. For B.’s high opinion of him, see BLJ III 249, VII 61, and VIII 57.

34: Joanna Baillie (1762-1851), whose tragedies on the passions were sometimes produced in her own lifetime, but never have been since. B. was in two minds about her: on April 23 1815 he wrote, “Women (saving Joanna Baillie) cannot write tragedy; they have not seen enough nor felt enough of life for it. I think Semiramis or Catherine II. Might have written (could they have been unqueened) a rare play” (BLJ IV 290). Later, on April 2 1817, he wrote, “Voltaire has asked why no woman has ever written even a tolerable tragedy? ’Ah (said the Patriarch) the composition of a tragedy requires testicles.’ If this be true, Lord knows what Joanna Baillie does; I suppose she borrows them” (BLJ V 203).

35: B. refers to Charles Lamb, On the Tragedies of Shakespeare, considered with reference to their fitness for Stage-Representation (1811), which contains the following:

“Never let me be so ungrateful as to forget the very high degree of satisfaction which I received some years back from seeing for the first time a tragedy of Shakespeare performed, in which these two great performers [Kean and Siddons] sustained the principal parts. It seemed to embody and realize conceptions which had hitherto assumed no distinct shape. But dearly do we pay all our life afterwards for this juvenile pleasure, this sense of distinctness. When the novelty is past, we find to our cost that, instead of realising an idea, we have only materialised and brought down a fine vision to the standard of flesh and blood. We have let go a dream, in quest of an unattainable substance.”

and

“It may seem a paradox, but I cannot help being of opinion that the plays of Shakespeare are less calculated for performance on a stage than those of almost any other dramatist whatever. Their distinguished excellence is a reason that they should be so. There is so much in them, which comes not under the province of acting, with which eye, and tone, and gesture, have nothing to do”.

SCENE – Partly on the Frontier of Silesia, and partly in Siegendorf Castle, near Prague. Time – The Close of the Thirty Years’ War.
ACT I

Scene 1. – The Hall of a decayed palace near a small town on the Northern frontier of Silesia – the night tempestuous. Werner and Josephine, his wife.

Josephine: My love, be calmer!
Werner: I am calm.
Josephine: To me –
But not to thyself: thy pace is hurried,
And no-one walks a chamber like to ours,
With steps like thine, when his heart is at rest.
Were it a garden, I should deem thee happy,
And stepping with the bee from flower to flower;
But here!
Werner: ’Tis chill; the tapestry lets through
The wind to which it waves: my blood is frozen.
Josephine: Ah, no!
Werner: (smiling): Why! wouldst thou have it so?
Josephine: I would
Have it healthful current.
Werner: Let it flow
Until ’tis spilt or checked – how soon, I care not.
Josephine: And I am I nothing in thy heart?
Werner: All – all.
Josephine: Then canst thou wish for that which must break mine?
Werner (approaching her slowly): But for thee I had been – no matter what –
But much of good and evil; what I am,
Thou knowest; what I might or should have been,
Thou knowest not: but still I love thee, nor Shall aught divide us.

Werner walks on abruptly, and then approaches Josephine.

The storm of the night,
Perhaps affects me; I’m a thing of feelings,
And have of late been sickly, as, alas!
Thou know’st by sufferings more than mine, my love!
In watching me.
Josephine: To see thee well is much –
To see thee happy –
Werner: Where hast thou seen such?
Let me be wretched with the rest!
Josephine: But think
How many in this hour of tempest shiver
Beneath the biting wind and heavy rain,
Whose every drop bows them down nearer earth,
Which hath no chamber for them save beneath
Her surface.
Werner: And that’s not the worst: who cares
For chambers? rest is all. The wretches whom Thou namest – aye, the wind howls round them, and
The dull and dropping rain saps in their bones
The creeping marrow. I have been a soldier,
A hunter, and a traveller, and am
A beggar, and should know the thing thou talk’st of.

Josephine: And art thou not now sheltered from them all?
Werner: Yes. And from these alone.
Josephine: And that is something.
Werner: True – to a peasant.
Josephine: Should the nobly born
Be thankless for that refuge which their habits
Of early delicacy render more
Needful than to the peasant, when the ebb
Of fortune leaves them on the shoals of life?
Werner: It is not that, thou know’st it is not: we
Have borne all this, I’ll not say patiently,
Except in thee – but we have borne it.

Josephine: Well?
Something beyond our outward sufferings (though
These were enough to gnaw into our souls),
Hath stung me oft, and, more than ever, now.
When, but for this untoward sickness, which Seized upon me upon this desolate frontier, and
Hath wasted, not alone my strength, but means,
And leaves us – no! this is beyond me! – but
For this I had been happy – thou been happy –
The splendour of my rank sustained – my name –
My father’s name – been still upheld; and, more
Than those –

Josephine (abruptly): My son – our son – our Ulric,
Been clasped again in these long-empty arms,
And all a mother’s hunger satisfied.
Twelve years! he was but eight then – beautiful
He was, and beautiful he must be now,
Ulric! my adored!

Werner: I have been full oft
The chase of Fortune; now she hath o’ertaken
My spirit where it cannot turn at bay –
Sick, poor, and lonely.

Josephine: Lonely! my dear husband?
Werner: Or worse – involving all I love, in this Far worse than solitude. Alone, I’d died,
And all been over in a nameless grave.36

Josephine: And I had not outlived thee; but pray take Comfort! We have struggled long; and they who strive
With Fortune win or weary her at last,
So that they find the goal or cease to feel

36: Werner longs for the unnamed grave of all true Byronic Heroes.
Further. Take comfort – we shall find our boy.

Werner: We were in sight of him, of every thing
Which could bring compensation for past sorrow –
And to be baffled thus!

Josephine: We are not baffled.

Werner: Are we not penniless?

Josephine: We ne’er were wealthy.

Werner: But I was born to wealth, and rank, and power;
Enjoyed them, loved them, and, alas! abused them,
And forfeited them by my father’s wrath,
In my o’er-fervent youth: but for the abuse
Long-sufferings have atoned. My father’s death
Left the path open, yet not without snares.
This cold and creeping kinsman, who so long
Kept his eye on me, as the snake upon
The fluttering bird, hath ere this time outstepped me,
Become the master of my rights, and lord
Of that which lifts him up to princes in Dominion and domain.

Josephine: Who knows? our son
May have returned back to his grandsire, and Even now uphold thy rights for thee? 37

Werner: ’Tis hopeless,
Since his strange disappearance from my father’s,
Entailing, as it were, my sins upon
Himself, 38 no tidings have revealed his course.
I parted with him to his grandsire, on
The promise that his anger would stop short
Of the third generation; but Heaven seems
To claim her stern prerogative, and visit
Upon my boy his father’s faults and follies.

Josephine: I must hope better still – at least we have yet
Baffled the long pursuit of Stralenheim.

Werner: We should have done, but for this fatal sickness;
More fatal than a mortal malady,
Because it takes not life, but life’s sole solace:
Even now I feel my spirit girt about
By the snares of this avaricious fiend:
How do I know he hath not tracked us here?

Josephine: He does not know thy person; and his spies,
Who so long watched thee, have been left at Hamburgh.
Our unexpected journey, and this change
Of name, leaves all discovery far behind:
None hold us here for aught save what we seem.

Werner: Save what we seem! Say what we are – sick beggars,
Even to our very hopes. Ha! ha!

Josephine: Alas!

37: Establishes the play’s main theme, the son compensating for the father’s failure.
38: In Werner, the sins of the fathers are not visited on the children; the children commit the sins the fathers lack the nerve to commit.
That bitter laugh!

Werner: Who would read in this form
The high soul of the son of a long line?
Who, in this garb, the heir of princely lands?
Who, in this sunken, sickly eye, the pride
Of rank and ancestry? In this worn cheek
And famine-hollowed brow, the lord of halls
Which daily feast a thousand vassals?

Josephine: You
Pondered not thus upon these worldly things,
My Werner! when you deigned to choose for bride
The foreign daughter of a wandering exile.

Werner: An exile’s daughter with an outcast son,
Were a fit marriage: but I still had hopes
To lift thee to the state we both were born for.
Your father’s house was noble, though decayed;
And worthy by its birth to match with ours.

Josephine: Your father did not think so, though ’twas noble;
But had my birth been all my claim to match
With thee, I should have deemed it what it is.

Werner: And what is that in thine eyes?
Josephine: All which it
Has done in our behalf – nothing.

Werner: How – nothing?

Josephine: Thy heart from the beginning: but for this,
We had not felt our poverty but as
Millions of myriads feel it – cheerfully;
But for these phantoms of thy feudal fathers,
Thou mightst have earned thy bread, as thousands earn it;
Or, if that seem too humble, tried by commerce,
Or civic means, to amend thy fortunes.

Werner (ironically): And been an Hanseatic burgher? Excellent!
Whate’er thou mightest have been, to me thou art
What no state high or low can ever change,
My heart’s first choice – which chose thee, knowing neither
Thy birth, thy hopes, thy pride; nought, save thy sorrows:
While they last, let me comfort or divide them:
When they end – let mine end with them, or thee!

Werner: My better angel! Such I have ever found thee;
This rashness, or this weakness of my temper,
Ne’er raised a thought to injure thee or thine.
Thou didst not mar my fortunes: my own nature
In youth was such as to unmake an empire,
Had such been my inheritance; but now,
Chastened, subdued, out-worn, and taught to know

39: This is the first example in Werner of Byron’s habit of ending a split pentameter with a monosyllable from the second speaker, on a syllable-count principle, even though no dramatic advantage is gained.
40: Werner shows the aristocrat’s contempt for the bourgeois.
Myself – to lose this for our son and thee!
Trust me, when, in my two-and-twentieth spring,
My father barred me from my father’s house,
The last sole scion of a thousand sires
(For I was then the last), it hurt me less
Than to behold my boy and my boy’s mother
Excluded in their innocence from what
My faults deserved – exclusion; although then
My passions were all living serpents, and Twined like the Gorgon’s round me.

A loud knocking is heard.

Josephine: Hark!
Werner: A knocking!
Josephine: Who can it be at this lone hour? We have Few visitors.
Werner: And poverty hath none,
Save those who come to make it poorer still.
Well – I am prepared.

Werner puts his hand into his bosom, as if to search for some weapon.

Josephine: Oh! do not look so. I
Will to the door. It cannot be of import
In this lone spot of wintry desolation:
The very desert saves man from mankind.

She goes to the door. Enter Idenstein.

Idenstein: A fair good evening to my fair hostess
And worthy – what’s your name, my friend?
Werner: Are you
Not afraid to demand it?
Idenstein: Not afraid?
Egad! I am afraid. You look as if
I asked for something better than your name,
By the face you put on it.
Werner: Better, sir!
Idenstein: Better or worse, like matrimony: what Shall I say more? You have been a guest this month!
Here in the prince’s palace (to be sure,
His Highness had resigned it to the ghosts
And rats these twelve years – but ’tis still a palace) –
I say you have been our lodger, and as yet,
We do not know your name.
Werner: My name is Werner.

41: The play’s first 165 lines have been entirely expository, for the audience’s benefit. Nothing has been said by either Werner or Josephine that they wouldn’t have known already.
42: In Lee, Idenstein is not the Intendant, but a local lawyer.
Idenstein: A goodly name, a very worthy name,
As e’er was girt upon a trader’s board:
I have a cousin in the lazaretto\(^{43}\)
Of Hamburgh, who has got a wife who bore
The same. He is an officer of trust,
A surgeon’s assistant (hoping to be surgeon),
And has done miracles i’the way of business.
Perhaps you are related to my relative?

Werner: To yours?

Josephine: Oh, yes; we are, but distantly (aside, to Werner):
Cannot you humour the dull gossip till
We learn his purpose?

Idenstein: Well, I’m glad of that;
I thought so all along, such natural yearnings
Played round my heart – blood is not water, cousin;
And so let’s have some wine, and drink unto
Our better acquaintance: relatives should be Friends.

Werner: You appear t’have drunk enough already;
And if you have not, I’ve no wine to offer,
Else it were yours: but this you know, or should know:
You see I am poor, and sick, and will not see
That I would be alone; but to your business!
What brings you here?

Idenstein: Why, what should bring me here?

Werner: I know not, though I think that I could guess
That which will send you hence.

Josephine (aside): Patience, dear Werner!

Idenstein: You don’t know what has happened, then?

Josephine: How should we?

Idenstein: The river has o’erflowed.

Josephine: Alas! we’ve known
That to our sorrow for these five days; since
It keeps us here.

Idenstein: But what you don’t know is,
That a great personage, who fain would cross
Against the stream and three postillions’ wishes,
Is drowned below the ford, with five post-horses,
A monkey, and a mastiff – and a valet.\(^{44}\)

Josephine: Poor creatures! are you sure?

Idenstein: Yes, of the monkey,
And the valet, and the cattle; but as yet
We know not if his Excellency’s dead
Or no; your noblemen are hard to drown,
As it is fit that men in office should be,
But what is certain is, that he has swallowed
Enough of the Oder to have burst two peasants;

\(^{43}\): The quarantine area.
\(^{44}\): B.’s entourage normally included these three items.
And now a Saxon and Hungarian traveller,
Who, at their proper peril, snatched him from
The whirling river, have sent on to crave
A lodging, or a grave, according as
It may turn out with the live or dead body.

Josephine: And where will you receive him? Here, I hope,
If we can be of service – say the word. 230

Idenstein: Here? no; but in the Prince’s own apartment,
As fits a noble guest – ‘tis damp, no doubt,
Not having been inhabited these twelve years;
But then he comes from a much damper place,
So scarcely will catch cold in’t, if he be
Still liable to cold – and if not, why
He’ll be worse lodged tomorrow: ne’ertheless,
I’ve ordered fire and all appliances
To be got ready for the worst – that is,
In case he should survive.

Josephine: Poor gentleman! 240
I hope he will, with all my heart.

Werner: Intendant,45 you not learned his name?
(aside to his wife): My Josephine,
I’ll sift this fool.

Exit Josephine.

Idenstein: His name? oh Lord!
Who knows if he hath now a name or no?
’Tis time enough to ask it when he’s able
To give an answer; or if not, to put
His heirs upon his epitaph. Methought
Just now you chid me for demanding names?

Werner: True, true, I did so: you say well and wisely.

Enter Gabor.46

Gabor: If I intrude, I crave –
Idenstein: Oh, no intrusion! 250
This is the palace; this a stranger like
Yourself; I pray you make yourself at home:
But where’s his Excellency? And how fares he?

Gabor: Wetly and wearily, but out of peril:
He paused to change his garments in a cottage

45: Intendant – one who ran a municipal department or province. A kind of mayor. In Lee, Idenstein and the Intendant are different people.
46: In Lee, this character is not named. Bethlem or Bethlehem Gabor was a Hungarian insurgent leader: Hare-Naylor I 96, Coxe IV 14. Lee’s description runs, “The Hungarian was indeed devoid of those exterior advantages by which his countrymen are generally distinguished. He was low in stature and swarthy. His features were not plain, but their expression was disagreeable; and he had the air of a man who has seen and suffered much. His step and deportment, however, were military; and, together with his address, announced self-possession” (Lee, p.233).
(Where I doffed mine for these, and came on hither),
And has almost recovered from his drenching.
He will be here anon.

Idenstein: What ho, there! bustle!
Without there, Herman, Weilburg, Peter, Conrad\textsuperscript{47}

\textit{Gives directions to different servants who enter.}

A nobleman sleeps here tonight – see that
All is in order in the damask chamber.
Keep up the stove – I will myself to the cellar –
And Madame Idenstein (my consort, stranger),
Shall furnish forth the bed-apparel; for,
To say the truth, they’re marvellous scant of this
Within the palace precincts, since his Highness
Left it some dozen years ago. And then
His Excellency will sup, doubtless?

Gabor: Faith! I cannot tell; but I should think the pillow
Would please him better than the table, after
His soaking in your river: but for fear
Your viands should be thrown away, I mean
To sup myself, and have a friend without
Who will do honour to your good cheer with
A traveller’s appetite.

Idenstein: But are you sure
His Excellency – but his name: what is it?

Gabor: I do not know.

Idenstein: And yet you saved his life.

Gabor: I helped my friend to do so.

Idenstein: Well, that’s strange,
To save a man’s life whom you do not know.

Gabor: Not so; for there are some I know so well,
I scarce should give myself the trouble.

Idenstein: Pray,

Gabor: Good friend, and who may you be?

Idenstein: By my family,

Gabor: Hungarian.

Idenstein: Which is called?

Gabor: It matters little.

Idenstein (\textit{aside}): I think that all the world are grown anonymous,
Since no one cares to tell me what he’s called!
Pray, has his Excellency a large suite?

Gabor: Sufficient.

Idenstein: How many?

Gabor: I did not count them.
We came up by mere accident, and just
In time to drag him through his carriage window.

\textsuperscript{47}: Calling the servants echoes \textit{The Taming of the Shrew}, IV i 75 and 105 (app.) The name Weilburg occurs at Lee, p.15 \textit{et. seq.}, and Conrad at Hare-Naylor, III p.664: not that B. would have needed a source.
Idenstein: Well, what would I give to save a great man! No doubt you’ll have a swingeing sum as recompense.

Gabor: Perhaps.

Idenstein: Now, how much do you reckon on?

Gabor: I have not yet put up myself to sale: In the mean time, my best reward would be A glass of your Hockheimer— a green glass, Wreathed with rich grapes and Bacchanal devices, O’erflowing with the oldest of your vintage For which I promise you, in case you e’er Run hazard of being drowned (although I own It seems, of all deaths, the least likely for you), I’ll pull you out for nothing. Quick, my friend, And think, for every bumper I shall quaff, A wave the less may roll above your head.

Idenstein (aside): I don’t much like this fellow – close and dry He seems – two things which suit me not; however, Wine he shall have; if that unlocks him not, I shall not sleep tonight for curiosity.

Exit Idenstein.

Gabor (to Werner): This master of the ceremonies is The Intendant of the palace, I presume: ’Tis a fine building, but decayed.

Werner: The apartment Designed for him you rescued will be found In fitter order for a sickly guest.

Gabor: I wonder then you occupied it not, For you seem delicate in health.

Werner (quickly): Sir! Gabor: Pray Excuse me: have I said aught to offend you?

Werner: Nothing: but we are strangers to each other.

Gabor: And that’s the reason I would have us less so. I thought our bustling guest without had said You were a chance and passing guest, the counterpart Of me and my companions.

Werner: Very true.

Gabor: Then, as we never met before, and never, It may be, may again encounter, why, I thought to cheer up this old dungeon here (At least to me) by asking you to share The fare of my companions and myself.

Werner: Pray, pardon me; my health –

Gabor: Even as you please. I have been a soldier, and perhaps am blunt In bearing.

48: Hockheimer, as in “For Godssake, Hock and Soda-Water!”
Werner: I have also served, and can
    Requite a soldier’s greeting.
Gabor: In what service?
    The Imperial?
Werner (quickly, and then, interrupting himself): I commanded – no – I mean
    I served; but it is many years ago,
    When first Bohemia raised her banner ’gainst
    The Austrian.
Gabor: Well, that’s over now, and peace
    Has turned some thousand gallant hearts adrift
    To live as they best may: and, to say truth,
    Some take the shortest.
Werner: What is that?
Gabor: Whate’er
    They lay their hands on. All Silesia and
    Lusatia’s woods are tenanted by bands
    Of the late troops, who levy on the country
    Their maintenance: the chatelains must keep
    Their castle walls – beyond them ’tis but doubtful
    Travel for your rich Count or full-blown Baron.
    My comfort is that, wander where I may,
    I’ve little left to lose now.
Werner: And I – nothing.
Gabor: That’s harder still. You say you were a soldier.
Werner: I was.
Gabor: You look one still. All soldiers are
    Or should be comrades, even though enemies.
    Our swords when drawn must cross, our engines aim (While levelled) at each other’s hearts; but when
    A truce, a peace, or what you will, remits
    The steel into its scabbard, and lets sleep
    The spark which lights the matchlock, we are brethren.
    You are poor and sickly – I am not rich, but healthy;
    I want for nothing which I cannot want;
    You seem devoid of this – wilt share it?

    Gabor pulls out his purse.

    Who
    Told you I was a beggar?
Gabor: You yourself,
    In saying you were a soldier during peace-time.
Werner (looking at him with suspicion): You know me not.
Gabor: I know no man, not even
    Myself: how should I then know one I ne’er
    Beheld till half an hour since?

49: He refers to the start of the Thirty Years’ War, in 1618. See Lee p.63. Notice that Werner carefully avoids saying on which side he fought, whether Austrian / Imperial or Bohemian / rebellious.
50: chatelains were commanders of castles.
Werner: Sir, I thank you. Your offer’s noble were it to a friend, And not unkind as to an unknown stranger, Though scarcely prudent; but no less I thank you. I am a beggar in all save his trade; And when I beg of any one, it shall be Of him who was the first to offer what Few can obtain by asking. Pardon me.

Exit Werner.

Gabor (solus): A goodly fellow by his looks, though worn As most good fellows are, by pain or pleasure, Which tear life out of us before our time; I scarce know which most quickly: but he seems To have seen better days, as who has not Who has seen yesterday? But here approaches Our sage Intendant, with the wine: however, For the cup’s sake I’ll bear the cupbearer.

Idenstein: ’Tis here! the supernaculum!²¹ twenty years Of age, if ’tis a day.

Gabor: Which epoch makes Young women and old wine; and ’tis great pity, Of two such excellent things, increase of years, Which still improves the one, should spoil the other. Fill full – here’s to our hostess! your fair wife!

Takes the glass.

Idenstein: Fair! Well, I trust your taste in wine is equal To that you show for beauty; but I pledge you Nevertheless.

Gabor: Is not the lovely woman I met in the adjacent hall, who, with An air, and port, and eye, which would have better Beseemed this palace in its brightest days (Though in a garb adapted to its present Abandonment), returned my salutation – Is not the same your spouse?

Idenstein: I would she were! But you’re mistaken – that’s the stranger’s wife.

Gabor: And by her aspect she might be a prince’s; Though time hath touched her too, she still retains Much beauty, and more majesty.

Idenstein: And that Is more than I can say for Madame Idenstein, At least in beauty: as for majesty, She has some of its properties which might

²¹ Supernaculum: Latin for “on the (thumb)nail”: here, “a high-class vintage”.
Be spared – but never mind!

Gabor: I don’t. But who
May be this stranger? He too hath a bearing Above his outward fortunes.

Idenstein: There I differ.
He’s poor as Job, and not so patient; but
Who he may be, or what, or aught of him,
Except his name (and that I only learned Tonight), I know not.

Gabor: But how came he here?

Idenstein: In a most miserable old calèche52
About a month since, and immediately
Fell sick, almost to death. He should have died.

Gabor: Tender and true! but why?

Idenstein: Why, what is life
Without a living? He has not a stiver.53

Gabor: In that case, I much wonder that a person
Of your apparent prudence should admit
Guests so forlorn into this noble mansion.

Idenstein: That’s true: but pity, as you know, does make One’s heart commit these follies; and beside,
They had some valuables left at that time,
Which paid their way up to the present hour;
And so I thought they might as well be lodged
Here as at the small tavern, and I gave them
The run of some of the oldest palace rooms.
They served to air them, at the least as long
As they could pay for firewood.

Gabor: Poor souls!

Idenstein: Aye,
Exceeding poor.

Gabor: And yet unused to poverty
If I mistake not. Whither were they going?

Idenstein: Oh! Heaven knows where, unless to Heaven itself.
Some days ago that looked the likeliest journey
For Werner.

Gabor: Werner! I have heard the name.
But it may be a feigned one.

Idenstein: Like enough!
But hark! a noise of wheels and voices, and
A blaze of torches from without. As sure
As destiny, his Excellency’s come.
I must be at my post; will you not join me,
To help him from his carriage, and present
Your humble duty at the door?

Gabor: I dragged him
From out that carriage when he would have given

52: Anachronism. A calèche was a two-wheel, single-horse carriage, developed in early nineteenth century France. The word occurs at Lee, p.9.
53: stiver – from a Dutch word for a low-value coin ("stuiver").
His barony or county to repel
The rushing river from his gurgling throat.
He has valets now enough: they stood aloof then,
Shaking their dripping ears upon the shore,
All roaring “Help!” but offering none; and as
For duty (as you call it) I did mine then,
Now do yours. Hence, and bow and cringe him here!

Idenstein: I cringe! but I shall lose the opportunity
Plague take it! he’ll be here, and I not there!

Exit Idenstein hastily.

Re-enter Werner.

Werner (to himself): I heard a noise of wheels and voices. How
All sounds now jar me!\(^{(54)}\) (perceiving Gabor): Still here! Is he not
A spy of my pursuer’s? His frank offer
So suddenly, and to a stranger, wore
The aspect of a secret enemy;
For friends are slow at such.

Gabor: Sir, you seem rapt;
And yet the time is not akin to thought.
These old walls will be noisy soon. The Baron,
Or count (or whatso’er this half-drowned noble
May be), for whom this desolate village and
Its lone inhabitants show more respect
Than did the elements, is come.

Idenstein (without): This way –
This way, your Excellency – have a care,
The staircase is a little gloomy, and
Somewhat decayed; but if we had expected
So high a guest – pray take my arm, my Lord!

Enter Stralenheim, Idenstein, and attendants – partly his own, and partly retainers of the domain of which Idenstein is Intendant.

Stralenheim: I’ll rest here a moment.
Idenstein (to the servants): Ho! a chair!
Instantly, knaves.

Stralenheim sits down.

Werner: ’Tis he!
Stralenheim: I’m better now.
Who are these strangers?
Idenstein: Please you, my good Lord,
One says he is no stranger.
Werner (aloud and hastily): Who says that?

\(^{(54)}\): Echoes Macbeth at II ii 58: How is’t with me, when every noise appals me?
They look at him with surprise.

Idenstein: Why, no one spoke of you, or to you! – but
Here’s one his Excellency may be pleased
To recognise. (pointing to Gabor):
Gabor: I seek not to disturb
His noble memory.
Stralenheim: I apprehend
This is one of the strangers to whose aid
I owe my rescue. (pointing to Werner): Is not that the other?
My state when I was succoured must excuse
My uncertainty to whom I owe so much.
Idenstein: He! no, my Lord! he rather wants for rescue
Than can afford it. 'Tis a poor sick man,
Travel-tired, and lately risen from a bed
From whence he never dreamed to rise.
Stralenheim: Methought
That there were two.
Gabor: There were, in company;
But, in the service rendered to your Lordship,
I needs must say but one, and he is absent.
The chief part of whatever aid was rendered
Was his: it was his fortune to be first.
My will was not inferior, but his strength
And youth outstripped me; therefore do not waste
Your thanks on me. I was but a glad second
Under a nobler principal.
Stralenheim: Where is he?
An attendant: My Lord, he tarried in the cottage where
Your Excellency rested for an hour,
And said he would be here tomorrow.
Stralenheim: Till
That hour arrives, I can but offer thanks,
And then –
Gabor: I seek no more, and scarce deserve
So much. My comrade may speak for himself.
Stralenheim: (fixing his eyes upon Werner, then aside): It cannot be!
and yet he must be looked to.
'Tis twenty years since I beheld him with
These eyes; and, though my agents still have kept
Their's on him, policy has held aloof
My own from his, not to alarm him into Suspicion of my plan. Why did I leave
At Hamburgh those who would have made assurance
If this be he or no? I thought, ere now,
To have been lord of Siegendorf, and parted
In haste, though even the elements appear
To fight against me, and this sudden flood
May keep me prisoner here till –
He pauses and looks at Werner; then resumes.

This man must
Be watched. If it is he, he is so changed,
His father, rising from his grave again,
Would pass by him unknown. I must be wary:
An error would spoil all.

Idenstein: Your Lordship seems
Pensive. Will it not please you to pass on?

Stralenheim: ’Tis past fatigue, which gives my weighed-down spirit
An outward show of thought. I will to rest.

Idenstein: The Prince’s chamber is prepared, with all
The very furniture the Prince used when
Last here, in its full splendour. (aside): Somewhat tattered,
And devilish damp, but fine enough by torch-light;
And that’s enough for your right noble blood
Of twenty quarterings upon a hatchment;
So let their bearer sleep ’neath something like one
Now, as he one day will for ever lie.

Stralenheim (rising and turning to Gabor): Good night, good people!
Sir, I trust tomorrow
Will find me apter to requite your service.
In the meantime I crave your company
A moment in my chamber.

Gabor: I attend you.

Stralenheim (after a few steps, pauses, and calls Werner): Friend!
Werner: Sir!

Idenstein: Sir! Lord – oh Lord! Why don’t you say
His Lordship, or his Excellency? Pray,
My Lord, excuse this poor man’s want of breeding;
He hath not been accustomed to admission
To such a presence.

Stralenheim (to Idenstein): Peace, Intendant!
Idenstein: Oh!
I am dumb.55

Stralenheim (to Werner): Have you been long here?
Werner: Long?

Stralenheim: An answer, not an echo.
Werner: You may seek
Both from the walls. I am not used to answer
Those whom I know not.

Stralenheim: Indeed! Ne’er the less,
You might reply with courtesy to what
Is asked in kindness.

When I know it such
I will requite – that is, reply – in unison.

Stralenheim: The Intendant said, you had been detained by sickness –

55: Antonio’s line at The Merchant of Venice, V i 279.
If I could aid you – journeying the same way?

Werner (quickly): I am not journeying the same way!

Stralenheim: How know ye

That, ere you know my route?

Werner: Because there is

But one way that the rich and poor must tread

Together. You diverged from that dread path

Some hours ago, and I some days: henceforth

Our roads must lie asunder, though they tend

All to one home.

Stralenheim: Your language is above

Your station.

Werner (bitterly): Is it?

Stralenheim: Or, at least, beyond your garb.

Werner: 'Tis well that it is not beneath it,

As sometimes happens to the better clad.

But, in a word, what would you with me?

Stralenheim (startled):

I?

Werner: Yes – you! You know me not, and question me,

And wonder that I answer not – not knowing

My inquisitor. Explain what you would have,

And then I’ll satisfy yourself, or me.

Stralenheim: I knew not that you had reasons for reserve.

Werner: Many have such – have you none?

Stralenheim: None which can

Interest a mere stranger.

Werner: Then forgive

The same unknown and humble stranger, if

He wishes to remain so to the man

Who can have nought in common with him.

Stralenheim: Sir, I will not balk your humour, though untoward:

I only meant you service – but good night!

Intendant, show the way! (to Gabor): Sir, you will with me?

Exeunt Stralenheim and attendants, Idenstein and Gabor.

Werner (solus): 'Tis he! I am taken in the toils. Before

I quitted Hamburgh, Giulio,\(^{56}\) his late steward,

Informed me, that he had obtained an order

From Brandenburgh’s elector, for the arrest

Of Kruitzner (such the name I then bore), when

I came upon the frontier; the free city

Alone preserved my freedom – till I left

Its walls – fool that I was to quit them!

But I deemed this humble garb, and route obscure,

Had baffled the slow hounds in their pursuit.

What’s to be done? He knows me not by person;

\(^{56}\): The name Giulio occurs at Lee, p.128. It is that of a Piedmontese resident in Hamburg. B. had an Italian steward, Lega Zambelli.
Nor could aught, save the eye of apprehension,
Have recognised him, after twenty years
We met so rarely and so coldly in
Our youth. But those about him! Now I can Divine the frankness of the Hungarian, who
No doubt is a mere tool and spy of Stralenheim’s,
To sound and to secure me. Without means!
Sick, poor – begirt too with the flooding rivers,
Impassable even to the wealthy, with
All the appliances which purchase modes
Of overpowering peril, with men’s lives –
How can I hope? An hour ago methought
My state beyond despair; and now, ’tis such,
The past seems paradise. Another day,
And I’m detected – on the very eve
Of honours, rights, and my inheritance,
When a few drops of gold might save me still
In favouring an escape.

Enter Idenstein and Fritz in conversation.

Fritz: Immediately.
Idenstein: I tell you, ’tis impossible.
Fritz: It must
Be tried, however; and if one express
Fail, you must send on others, till the answer
Arrives from Frankfort, from the commandant.
Idenstein: I will do what I can.
Fritz: And recollect
To spare no trouble; you will be repaid
Tenfold.
Idenstein: The Baron is retired to rest?
Fritz: He hath thrown himself into an easy chair
Beside the fire, and slumbers; and has ordered
He may not be disturbed until eleven,
When will take himself to bed.
Idenstein: Before
An hour is past I’ll do my best to serve him.
Remember!

Exit Fritz.

The devil take these great men! they
Think all things made for them. Now here must I
Rouse up some half a dozen shivering vassals
From their scant pallets, and, at peril of
Their lives, despatch them o’er the river towards Frankfort. Methinks the Baron’s own experience

57: Fritz has no equivalent in Lee.
Some hours ago might teach him fellow-feeling
But no, “it must”, and there’s an end. How now?
Are you there, Mynheer Werner?58

Werner: You have left

Idenstein: Yes – he’s dozing, and seems to like that none should sleep besides.
Here is a packet for the Commandant
Of Frankfort, at all risks and all expenses;
But I must not lose time – good night!

Exit Idenstein.

Werner: “To Frankfort!”
So, so, it thickens! Aye, “the Commandant”!
This tallies well with all the prior steps
Of this cool, calculating fiend, who walks
Between me and my father’s house. No doubt
He writes for a detachment to convey me
Into some secret fortress. Sooner than
This –

Werner looks around, and snatches up a knife lying on a table in a recess.60

Now I’m master of myself at least.
Hark – footsteps! How do I know that Stralenheim
Will wait for even the show of that authority
Which is to overshadow usurpation?
That he suspects me’s certain. I’m alone,
He with a numerous train: I weak – he strong
In gold, in numbers, rank, authority.
I nameless, or involving in my name
Destruction, till I reach my own domain;
He full-blown with his titles, which impose
Still further on these obscure petty burghers
Than they could do elsewhere. Hark! nearer still!
I’ll to the secret passage, which communicates
With the – No! all is silent – ’twas my fancy!
Still as the breathless interval between
The flash and thunder – I must hush my soul
Amidst its perils. Yet I will retire,

58: Mynheer is Dutch for “Mein Herr”, but B. is always cavalier about languages and cultures with which he’s not intimate, such as Russian or Polynesian.
59: Echoes Macbeth at III i 69-71: Rather than so, / Come, Fate, into the list, and champion me / To th’utterance!
60: “In the last moment of desperation his eye glanced upon a large and sharp knife which lay on the table near, and with which she [Josephine] had been cutting bread for the child’s supper. Siegendorf seized it with an earnest grasp, as if with it he had seized his fate: then pausing irresolutely for a moment, he at length turned from the do towards which he had advanced, and past abruptly through another in the opposite direction: – not less determined than before, but like a man who feeling he has power in his hands, is become less desperate” (Lee, p.163).
To see if still be unexplored the passage
I wot of: it will serve me as a den
Of secrecy for some hours, at the worst.

Werner draws a pannel, and exit, closing it after him.

Enter Gabor and Josephine.

Gabor: Where is your husband?\textsuperscript{61}

Josephine: Here, I thought: I left him
Not long since in his chamber. But these rooms
Have not many outlets, and he may be gone
To accompany the Intendant.

Gabor: Baron Stralenheim
Put many questions, to the Intendant on
The subject of your lord, and, to be plain,
I have my doubts if he means well.

Josephine: Alas!
What can there be in common with the proud
And wealthy Baron, and the unknown Werner?

Gabor: That you know best.

Josephine: Oh, if it were so, how
Come you to stir yourself in his behalf,
Rather than that of him whose life you saved?

Gabor: I helped to save him, as in peril; but I did not pledge myself to serve him in Oppression. I know well these nobles, and
Their thousand modes of trampling on the poor.
I have proved them; and my spirit boils up when
I find them practising against the weak.
This is my only motive.

Josephine: It would be
Not easy to persuade my consort of
Your good intentions.

Gabor: Is he so suspicious?

Josephine: He was not once; but time and troubles have Made him what you beheld.

Gabor: I’m sorry for it.

Josephine: Suspicion is a heavy armour, and
With its own weight impedes more than protects.
Good night! I trust to meet with him at day-break.

Exit Gabor. Re-enter Idenstein with some peasants. Josephine retires up the hall.

First Peasant: But if I’m drowned?

Idenstein: Why, you will be well paid for’t,
And have risked more than drowning for as much,
I doubt not.

Second Peasant: But our wives and families?

\textsuperscript{61}: Echoes precisely \textit{Macbeth}, IV ii 79.
Idenstein: Cannot be worse off than they are, and may Be better.

Third Peasant: I have neither, and will venture.

Idenstein: That’s right. A gallant carle,62 and fit to be
   A soldier. I’ll promote you to the ranks
   In the Prince’s body-guard – if you succeed:
   And you shall have besides, in sparkling coin,
   Two thalers.63

Third Peasant: No more?

Idenstein: Out upon your avarice!
   Can that low vice alloy so much ambition?
   I tell thee, fellow, that two thalers in
   Small change will subdivide into a treasure;
   Do not five hundred thousand heroes daily
   Risk lives and souls for the tithe of one thaler?
   And you would pause to do as much for two?
   When had you half the sum?

Third Peasant: Never – but ne’er
   The less I must have three.

Idenstein: Have you forgot
   Whose vassal you were born, knave?

Third Peasant: No – the Prince’s,
   And not the stranger’s.

Idenstein: Sirrah! in the Prince’s
   Absence, I am sovereign; and the Baron is
   My intimate connection – “Cousin Idenstein!”
   (Quoth he) you’ll order out a dozen vileins.”
   And so, you villains! Troop – march – march, I say;
   And if a single dog’s ear of this packet
   Be sprinkled by the Oder – look to it!
   For every page of paper, shall a hide
   Of yours be stretched as parchment on a drum,
   Like Ziska’s skin,64 to beat alarm to all
   Refractory vassals, who can not effect
   Impossibilities. Away, ye earth-worms!

   Exit, driving them out.

Josephine (coming forward): I fain would shun these scenes,
   too oft repeated,
   Of feudal tyranny o’er petty victims;
   I cannot aid, and will not witness such.
   Even here, in this remote, unnamed, dull spot,
   The dimmest in the district’s map, exist
   The insolence of wealth in poverty
   O’er something poorer still – the pride of rank
   In servitude, o’er something still more servile;

62: carle – churl, peasant.
63: thaler – German coin.
64: Johann Ziska, one-eyed Bohemian Hussite leader whose skin was in legend used to cover a drum.
And vice in misery affecting still
A tattered splendour. What a state of being!
In Tuscany, my own dear sunny land,
Our nobles were but citizens and merchants,
Like Cosmo.\textsuperscript{65} We had evils, but not such
As these; and our all-ripe and gushing valleys
Made poverty more cheerful, where each herb
Was in itself a meal, and every vine
Rained, as it were, the beverage which makes glad
The heart of man; and the ne’er unfelt sun
(But rarely clouded, and when clouded, leaving
His warmth behind in memory of his beams)
Makes the worn mantle, and the thin robe, less
Oppressive than an emperor’s jewelled purple.
But, here! the despot s of the north appear
To imitate the ice-wind of their clime,
Searching the shivering vassal through his rags,
To wring his soul – as the bleak elements
His form. And ‘tis to be amongst these sovereigns
My husband pants! and such his pride of birth –
That twenty years of usage, such as no
Father born in a humble state could nerve
His soul to persecute a son withal,
Hath changed no atom of his early nature;
But I, born nobly also, from my father’s
Kindness was taught a different lesson. Father!
May thy long-tried and now rewarded spirit
Look down on us and our so long desired
Ulric! I love my son, as thou didst me!
What’s that? Thou, Werner! can it be? and thus?

\textit{Enter Werner hastily, with the knife in his hand, by the secret pannel, which he closes hurriedly after him.}

\textbf{Werner (not at first recognising her):} Discovered! Then I’ll stab – \textbf{(recognising her) Ah! Josephine,}
Why art thou not at rest?
\textbf{Josephine:} What rest? My God!
\textbf{Werner (showing a rouleau):}\textsuperscript{66} Here’s gold – gold, Josephine,
Will rescue us from this detested dungeon.
\textbf{Josephine:} And how obtained? – that knife!
\textbf{Werner:} 'Tis bloodless – yet.
\textbf{Josephine:} But whence comest thou? 740
\textbf{Werner:} Ask not! but let us think where we shall go
This – this will make us way (showing the gold) I’ll fit them

\textsuperscript{65}: Cosimo de’ Medici, Florentine leader.
\textsuperscript{66}: rouleau: a cylinder-shaped paper-wrapped packet of gold coins. See Don Juan XII, 12, 1.
Josephine: I dare not think thee guilty of dishonour.

Werner: Dishonour!

Josephine: I have said it.

Werner: Let us hence: 'Tis the last night, I trust, that we need pass here.

Josephine: And not the worst, I hope.

Werner: Hope! I make sure. But let us to our chamber.

Josephine: Yet one question – What hast thou done?

Werner (fiercely): Left one thing undone, which Had made all well; let me not think of it! Away!

Josephine: Alas that I should doubt of thee!

Exeunt.

67: In Lee, we know what he’s “done”: “The spring, invisible on one side, was palpable at once on the other; encouraged by profound silence, he gently prest it, and found himself precisely where the previous calculation of a moment would have told him he would find himself – in the state chamber of the palace, with which that in his own house communicated, and the bed-room of Baron Stralenheim! Astonishment, approaching to stupor, chained up the faculties of Siegendorf; yet an instinctive impulse of self-preservation made him grasp with ferocious boldness the knife he still held. The apartment was extremely spacious, and magnificently hung: a bed of purple velvet, fringed with silver, stood under a canopied recess on one side; on the other was a cabinet of curious wood, ornamented with precious stones, and richly mounted: lighted tapers were placed near, and letters, as well as other papers, confusedly scattered over it; but the object which at once arrested the attention of the Count was several rouleaux of gold that lay ranged beside them. – Lastly, near the fire, abhorred by his eyes, and now fearful indeed to his imagination, was Stralenheim himself, stretched in an easy chair, and buried in a deep sleep.

The dæmons of desperation and cupidity seized at once upon their victim in every form of temptation ingenuity could devise. Driven thus to the verge of a precipice, without one hand to save, one hope to soothe him, poverty – insult – a dungeon! a despoiled inheritance – a helpless child, and a despairing wife, passed at once in gloomy perspective before his imagination. How should he, who had never known what it was to contend with one imperious wish, now stem the torrent of all? He believed it almost a duty to free himself, for the sake even of others, from that abject penury which seemed to include every evil. – His hand was on the gold, when Stralenheim moved. Rendered desperate alike by shame and apprehension, Siegendorf fiercely raised the knife – happily the motion of the Baron brought with it no consciousness – he merely turned his face from the light which incommoded him. The Count, after gazing on him for a moment, hastily thrust into his bosom that portion of the gold which was nearest: – retreated – closed the door – and, in the dreadful perturbation and disgrace of the occasion, breathed out an imperfect ejaculation to that God who had providentially saved him from being a murderer!” (Lee, pp.170-3).

68: Werner knows he should have killed Stralenheim: the theft of the gold was a symbolic substitute.
ACT II.

Scene I. – A Hall in the same Palace.

Enter Idenstein and others.

Idenstein: Fine doings! goodly doings! honest doings!
A baron pillaged in a prince’s palace!
Where, till this hour, such a sin ne’er was heard of.

Fritz: It hardly could, unless the rats despoiled
The mice of a few shreds of tapestry.

Idenstein: Oh! that I e’er should live to see this day!
The honour of our city’s gone for ever. .

Fritz: Well, but now to discover the delinquent:
The Baron is determined not to lose
This sum without a search.

Idenstein: And so am I. 10

Fritz: But whom do you suspect?

Idenstein: Suspect! all people
Without – within – above – below – Heaven help me!

Fritz: Is there no other entrance to the chamber?

Idenstein: None whatsoever.

Fritz: Are you sure of that?

Idenstein: Certain. I have lived and served here since my birth,
And if there were such, must have heard of such,
Or seen it.

Fritz: Then it must be some one who
Had access to the antechamber. Doubtless.
The man called Werner’s poor!

Idenstein: Poor as a miser.69
But lodged so far off, in the other wing,
By which there’s no communication with
The Baron’s chamber, that it can’t be he.
Besides, I bade him “good night” in the hall,
Almost a mile off, and which only leads
To his own apartment, about the same time
When this burglarious, larcenous felony
Appears to have been committed.

Fritz: There’s another,
The stranger –

Idenstein: The Hungarian?

Fritz: He who helped
To fish the Baron from the Oder.

Idenstein: Not
Unlikely. But, hold – might it not have been
One of the suite?

69: B. to Murray, May 29 1822: “Your printer has made one odd mistake “poor as a Mouse” instead of “poor as a Miser” the expression may seem strange – but it is only a translation of “Semper avarus egret”. The quotation is HOR. EPIS. I ii 56.

70: For burglariously, see Don Juan I, 219, 6.
Fritz: How? We, Sir!
Idenstein: No – not you,
But some of the inferior knaves. You say
The Baron was asleep in the great chair –
The velvet chair – in his embroidered night-gown;
His toilet spread before him, and upon it
A cabinet with letters, papers, and
Several rouleaux of gold; of which one only
Has disappeared – the door unbolted,
No difficult access to any.

Fritz: Good Sir,
Be not so quick; the honour of the corps,
Which forms the Baron’s household, ’s unimpeached
From steward to scullion, save in the fair way
Of peculation; such as in accompts,
Weights, measures, larder, cellar, buttery,
Where all men take their prey,71 as also in
Postage of letters, gathering of rents,
Purveying feasts, and understanding with
The honest trades who furnish noble masters:
But for your petty, picking, downright thievery,
We scorn it as we do board-wages: then
Had one of our folks done it, he would not
Have been so poor a spirit as to hazard
His neck for one rouleau, but have swooped all;72
Also the cabinet, if portable.

Idenstein: There is some sense in that –
Fritz: No, Sir; be sure
’Twas none of our corps; but some petty, trivial
Picker and stealer,73 without art or genius.
The only question is – who else could have Access, save the Hungarian and yourself?
Idenstein: You don’t mean me?
Fritz: No, Sir; I honour more

Idenstein: And my principles, I hope.
Fritz: Of course. But to the point: What’s to be done?
Idenstein: Nothing – but there’s a good deal to be said.
We’ll offer a reward; move heaven and earth,
And the police (though there’s none nearer than Frankfort); post notices in manuscript
For we’ve no printer); and set by my clerk
To read them (for few can, save he and I).
We’ll send out villains to strip beggars, and Search empty pockets; also, to arrest

71: B. perhaps impugns the honesty of his own retinue, and of Lega Zambelli his steward. He wrote of Margarita Cogni in the Palazzo Mocenigo, “after she came into my house as donna di governo, the expences were reduced to less than half”.
72: Even in theft, Werner was half-hearted.
73: Echoes Hamlet, III ii 327 app.
All gypsies, and ill-clothed and sallow people.
Prisoners we’ll have at least, if not the culprit;
And for the Baron’s gold – if ‘tis not found,
At least he shall have the full satisfaction
Of melting twice its substance in the raising
The ghost of this rouleau. Here’s alchymy
For your lord’s losses!

Fritz: He hath found a better.
Idenstein: Where?
Fritz: In a most immense inheritance.
The late Count Siegendorf, his distant kinsman,
Is dead near Prague, in his castle, and my lord
Is on his way to take possession.

Idenstein: Was there
No heir?
Fritz: Oh, yes; but he has disappeared
Long from the world’s eye, and perhaps the world.
A prodigal son, beneath his father’s ban
For the last twenty years; for whom his sire
Refused to kill the fatted calf; and, therefore,
If living, he must chew the husks still. But
The Baron would find means to silence him,
Were he to re-appear: he’s politic,
And has much influence with a certain court.

Idenstein: He’s fortunate.
Fritz: ’Tis true, there is a grandson,
Whom the late Count reclaimed from his son’s hands,
And educated as his heir; but then
His birth is doubtful.

Idenstein: How so?
Fritz: His sire made
A left-hand, love, imprudent sort of marriage,
With an Italian exile’s dark-eyed daughter:
Noble, they say, too; but no match for such
A house as Siegendorf’s. The grandsire ill
Could brook the alliance; and could ne’er be brought
To see the parents, though he took the son.

Idenstein: If he’s a lad of mettle, he may yet
Dispute your claim, and weave a web that may
Puzzle your baron to unravel.

Fritz: Why,
For mettle, he has quite enough: they say,
He forms a happy mixture of his sire
And grandsire’s qualities – impetuous as
The former, and deep as the latter; but
The strangest is, that he too disappeared
Some months ago.

Idenstein: The devil he did!
Fritz: Why, yes:
It must have been at his suggestion, at
An hour so critical as was the eve
Of the old man’s death, whose heart was broken by it.

Idenstein: Was there no cause assigned?
Fritz: Plenty, no doubt,
And none perhaps the true one. Some averred
It was to seek his parents; some because
The old man held his spirit in too strictly
(But that could scarce be, for he doted on him);
A third believed he wished to serve in war,
But peace being made soon after his departure,
He might have since returned, were that the motive;
A fourth set charitably have surmised,
As there was something strange and mystic in him,
That in the wild exuberance of his nature,
He had joined the black bands,74 who lay waste Lusatia,
The mountains of Bohemia and Silesia,
Since the last years of war had dwindled into
A kind of general condottiero75 system
Of bandit warfare; each troop with its chief,
And all against mankind.

Idenstein: That cannot be.

A young heir, bred to wealth and luxury,
To risk his life and honours with disbanded
Soldiers and desperadoes!

Fritz: Heaven best knows!
But there are human natures so allied
Unto the savage love of enterprise,
That they will seek for peril as a pleasure.
I’ve heard that nothing can reclaim your Indian,
Or tame the tiger, though their infancy
Were fed on milk and honey. After all,
Your Wallenstein, your Tilly and Gustavus,
Your Bannier, and your Torstenson and Weimar,76
Were but the same thing upon a grand scale;
And now that they are gone, and peace proclaimed,
They who would follow the same pastime must Pursue it on their own account. Here comes
The Baron; and the Saxon stranger, who
Was his chief aid in yesterday’s escape,
But did not leave the cottage by the Oder
Until this morning.

74: In 1809, Duke Frederick William of Brunswick, intent on Napoleon’s defeat, founded a corps which he dressed entirely in black, causing him to be nicknamed the Black Duke, and them as the Black Band. They passed through the Isle of Wight in 1809, on their way to Portugal. B. refers to a common phenomenon in time of warfare, and the contemporary reference may be accidental. See also The Deformed Transformed II, i, 65: Bourbon’s black banditti.

75: The condottieri were free-booting bands of unemployed soldiers who ravaged medieval Italy.

76: Swedish and Imperial generals in the Thirty Years’ War. Wallenstein and Tilly (Hare-Naylor I 220 and 228), were Catholics. Gustavus Adolphus King of Sweden, William Duke of Weimar, Bannier (or Banner) and Torstenson (Hare-Naylor I 300, 656, 661, and II 413), were protestants.
Enter Stralenheim and Ulric.\textsuperscript{77}

Stralenheim: Since you have refused

All compensation, gentle stranger, save

Inadequate thanks, you almost check even them,

Making me feel the worthlessness of words,

And blush at my own barren gratitude,

They seem so niggardly compared with what

Your courteous courage did in my behalf.

Ulric: I pray you press the theme no further.

Stralenheim: But

Can I not serve you?\textsuperscript{78} You are young, and of

That mould which throws out heroes; fair in favour;

Brave, I know, by my living now to say so,

And, doubtlessly, with such a form and heart,

Would look into the fiery eyes of war,

As ardently for glory as you dared

An obscure death to save an unknown stranger

In an as perilous, but opposite element.

You are made for the service: I have served;

Have rank by birth and soldiership, and friends,

Who shall be yours. 'Tis true, this pause of peace

Favours such views at present scantily;

But 'twill not last, men's spirits are too stirring;

And, after thirty years of conflict, peace

Is but a petty war, as the times show us

In every forest, or a mere armed truce.

War will reclaim his own; and, in the meantime,

You might obtain a post, which would ensure

A higher soon, and, by my influence, fail not

To rise. I speak of Brandenburg, wherein

I stand well with the elector; in Bohemia,

Like you, I am a stranger, and we are now

Upon its frontier.

Ulric: You perceive my garb

Is Saxon, and of course my service due

To my own sovereign. If I must decline

Your offer, 'tis with the same feeling which

Induced it.

Stralenheim: Why, this is mere usury!

I owe my life to you, and you refuse

The acquittance of the interest of the debt,

To heap more obligations on me, till

I bow beneath them.

Ulric: You shall say so when

I claim the payment.

Stralenheim: Well, Sir, since you will not –

\textsuperscript{77} B. holds back the introduction of Ulric, the juvenile lead, until the second act.

\textsuperscript{78} The love of the older man for the beautiful younger one. Compare Antonio to Sebastian at Twelfth Night II i 31 (app.): … let me be your servant.
You are nobly born?
Ulric: I’ve heard my kinsmen say so.
Stralenheim: Your actions show it. Might I ask your name?
Ulric: Ulric.
Stralenheim: Your house’s?
Ulric: When I’m worthy of it, I’ll answer you.
(Aside) Most probably an Austrian, whom these unsettled times forbid to boast
His lineage on these wild and dangerous frontiers, where the name of his country is abhorred.
(Aloud to Fritz and Stralenheim): So, Sirs! how have ye sped in your researches?
Idenstein: Indifferent well, your excellency.
Stralenheim: Then I am to deem the plunderer is caught?
Idenstein: Humph! not exactly.
Stralenheim: Or at least suspected?
Idenstein: Oh! for that matter very much suspected.
Stralenheim: Who may he be?
Idenstein: Why, don’t you know, my lord?
Stralenheim: How should I? I was fast asleep.
Idenstein: Was I, and that’s the cause I know no more
Than does your excellency.
Stralenheim: Dolt!
Idenstein: Why, if
Your lordship, being robbed, don’t recognise
The rogue; how should I, not being robbed, identify
The thief among so many? In the crowd,
May it please your excellency, your thief looks
Exactly like the rest, or rather better:
’Tis only at the bar and in the dungeon
That wise men know your felon by his features;
But I’ll engage, that if seen there but once,
Whether he be found criminal or no,
His face shall be so.
(To Fritz): Prithee, Fritz, inform me
What hath been done to trace the fellow?
Fritz: Faith!
Idenstein: My lord, not much as yet, except conjecture.
Stralenheim: Besides the loss, (which, I must own, affects me
Just now materially), I needs would find
The villain out of public motives; for
So dexterous a spoiler, who could creep
Through my attendants, and so many peopled
And lighted chambers on my rest, and snatch
The gold before my scarce closed eyes, would soon
Leave bare your borough, Sir Intendant!
Idenstein: True;
If there were aught to carry off, my lord.
Ulric: What is all this?
Stralenheim: You joined us but this morning,
And have not heard that I was robbed last night.
Ulric: Some rumour of it reached me as I passed
The outer chambers of the palace, but
I know no further.
Stralenheim: It is a strange business:
The Intendant can inform you of the facts.
Idenstein: Most willingly. You see –
Stralenheim (impatiently): Defer your tale,
Till certain of the hearer’s patience.
Idenstein: That
Can only be approved by proofs. You see –
Stralenheim (again interrupting him, and addressing Ulric):
In short, I was asleep upon a chair,
My cabinet before me, with some gold
Upon it, (more than I much like to lose,
Though in part only): some ingenious person
Contrived to glide through all my own attendants,
Besides those of the place, and bore away
A hundred golden ducats, which to find
I would be fain, and there’s an end; perhaps
You (as I still am rather faint), would add
To yesterday’s great obligation, this,
Though slighter, yet not slight, to aid these men
(Who seem but lukewarm) in recovering it?
Ulric: Most willingly, and without loss of time
(to Idenstein): Come hither, Mynheer!
Idenstein: But so much haste bodes
Right little speed, and –
Ulric: Standing motionless
None; so let’s march, we’ll talk as we go on.
Idenstein: But –
Ulric: Show the spot, and then I’ll answer you.
Fritz: I will, Sir, with his excellency’s leave.
Stralenheim: Do so, and take yon old ass with you.
Fritz: Hence!
Ulric: Come on, old oracle, expound thy riddle!

Exit with Idenstein and Fritz.

Stralenheim (solus): A stalwart, active, soldier-looking stripling,
Handsome as Hercules ere his first labour,
And with a brow of thought beyond his years
When in repose, till his eye kindles up
In answering yours. I wish I could engage him:
I have need of some such spirits near me now,
For this inheritance is worth a struggle.
And though I am not the man to yield without one,
Neither are they who now rise up between me
And my desire. The boy, they say, ’s a bold one;
But he hath played the truant in some hour
Of freakish folly, leaving fortune to Champion his claims: that’s well. The father, whom
For years I’ve tracked, as does the blood-hound, never
In sight, but constantly in scent, had put me
To fault, but here I have him, and that’s better.
It must be he! All circumstance proclaims it;
And careless voices, knowing not the cause
Of my inquiries, still confirm it – Yes!
The man, his bearing, and the mystery
Of his arrival, and the time; the account, too,
The Intendant gave (for I have not beheld her)
Of his wife’s dignified but foreign aspect;
Besides the antipathy with which we met,
As snakes and lions shrink back from each other
By secret instinct that both must be foes
Deadly, without being natural prey to either;
All – all – confirm it to my mind: however,
We’ll grapple, ne’ertheless. In a few hours
The order comes from Frankfort, if these waters
Rise not the higher, (and the weather favours
Their quick abatement), and I’ll have him safe
Within a dungeon, where he may avouch
His real estate and name; and there’s no harm done,
Should he prove other than I deem. This robbery,
(Save for the actual loss), is lucky also:
He’s poor, and that’s suspicious – he’s unknown,
And that’s defenceless – true, we have no proofs
Of guilt, but what hath he of innocence?
Were he a man indifferent to my prospects,
In other bearings, I should rather lay
The inculpation on the Hungarian, who
Hath something which I like not; and alone
Of all around, except the Intendant, and
The prince’s household and my own, had ingress
Familiar to the chamber.

Enter Gabor.

Friend, how fare you?

Gabor: As those who fare well every where, when they
Have supped and slumbered, no great matter how –
And you, my lord?

Stralenheim: Better in rest than purse:
Mine inn is like to cost me dear.

Gabor: I heard
Of your late loss; but ’tis a trifle to
One of your order.

Stralenheim: You would hardly think so,
Were the loss yours.

Gabor: I never had so much
(At once) in my whole life, and therefore am not Fit to decide. But I came here to seek you.
Your couriers are turned back – I have outstripped them,
In my return.

Stralenheim: You! Why?
Gabor: I went at day-break,
To watch for the abatement of the river,
As being anxious to resume my journey.
Your messengers were all checked like myself;
And, seeing the case hopeless, I await
The current’s pleasure.

Stralenheim: Would the dogs were in it!
Why did they not, at least, attempt the passage?
I ordered this at all risks.

Gabor: Could you order
The Oder to divide, as Moses did
The Red Sea (scarcely redder than the flood
Of the swoln stream), and be obeyed, perhaps
They might have ventured.

Stralenheim: I must see to it:
The knaves! the slaves! but they shall smart for this.

Exit Stralenhem.

Gabor (solus): There goes my noble, feudal, self-willed baron!
Epitome of what brave chivalry
The preux chevaliers79 of the good old times
Have left us. Yesterday he would have given
His lands (if he hath any), and, still dearer,
His sixteen quarterings, for as much fresh air
As would have filled a bladder,80 while he lay
Gurgling and foaming half way through the window
Of his o’erset and water-logged conveyance,
And now he storms at half a dozen wretches
Because they love their lives too! Yet, he’s right:
’Tis strange they should, when such as he may put them
To hazard at his pleasure. Oh! thou world!
Thou art indeed a melancholy jest!

Exit Gabor.

79: preux chevaliers: “gallant knights”; see Don Juan VII, 33, 2, and XIII, 86, 3.
80: Compare Scott, The Antiquary: “Good man,” said Sir Arthur, “can you think of nothing?—of no help?—I’ll make you rich—I’ll give you a farm—I’ll”—
“Our riches will soon be equal,” said the beggar, looking out upon the strife of waters—“they are sae already; for I hae nae land; and you would give your fair bounds and barony for a square yard of rock that would be dry for twal hours.” (p.58)
ACT II scene ii.

The apartment of Werner, in the palace.

Enter Josephine and Ulric.

Josephine: Stand back, and let me look on thee again! My Ulric! my beloved! can it be After twelve years?

Ulric: My dearest mother!

Josephine: Yes! My dream is realized – how beautiful – How more than all I sighed for! Heaven receive A mother’s thanks! A mother’s tears of joy! This is indeed thy work! At such an hour, too, He comes not only as a son but saviour.

Ulric: If such a joy await me, it must double What I now feel, and lighten, from my heart, 10 A part of the long debt of duty, not Of love (for that was ne’er withheld); forgive me! This long delay was not my fault.

Josephine: I know it, But cannot think of sorrow now, and doubt If I e’er felt it, ’tis so dazzled from My memory, by this oblivious transport! My son!

Enter Werner.

Werner: What have we here, more strangers?

Josephine: No! Look but upon him! What do you see?

Werner: A stripling.

For the first time –

Ulric (kneeling): For twelve long years, my father!

Werner: Oh, God!

Josephine: He faints!

Werner: No – I’m better now – 20 Ulric! (embraces him)

Ulric: My father, Siegendorf!

Werner (starting): Hush! boy – The walls may hear that name!

Ulric: What then?

Werner: Why, then – But we will talk of that anon. Remember, I must be known here but as Werner. Come! Come to my arms again! Why, thou look’st all I should have been, and was not. Josephine! Sure ’tis no father’s fondness dazzles me; But had I seen that form amid ten thousand Youth of the choicest, my heart would have chosen This for my son!

Ulric: And yet you knew me not! 30
Werner: Alas! I have had that upon my soul
Which makes me look on all men with an eye
That only knows the evil at first glance.

Ulric: My memory served me far more fondly: I
Have not forgotten aught; and oft-times in
The proud and princely halls of (I’ll not name them,
As you say that ’tis perilous,) but i’ the pomp
Of your sire’s feudal mansion, I looked back
To the Bohemian mountains many a sunset,
And wept to see another day go down
O’er thee and me, with those huge hills between us.
They shall not part us more.

Werner: I know not that.
Are you aware my father is no more?

Ulric: Oh heavens! I left him in a green old age,
And looking like the oak, worn, but still steady
Amidst the elements, whilst younger trees
Fell fast around him. ’Twas scarce three months since.

Werner: Why did you leave him?

Josephine (embracing Ulric): Can you ask that question?
Is he not here?

Werner: True; he hath sought his parents,
And found them; but, oh! how, and in what state!

Ulric: All shall be bettered. What we have to do
Is to proceed, and to assert our rights,
Or rather yours; for I waive all, unless
Your father has disposed in such a sort
Of his broad lands as to make mine the foremost,
So that I must prefer my claim for form:
But I trust better, and that all is yours.

Werner: Have you not heard of Stralenheim?

Ulric: I saved
His life but yesterday: he’s here.

Werner: You saved
The serpent who will sting us all!

Ulric: You speak
Riddles: what is this Stralenheim to us?

Werner: Everything. One who claims our fathers’ lands:
Our distant kinsman, and our nearest foe.

Ulric: I never heard his name till now. The Count,
Indeed, spoke sometimes of a kinsman, who,
If his own line should fail, might be remotely
Involved in the succession; but his titles
Were never named before me – and what then?
His right must yield to ours.

Werner: Aye, if at Prague:
But here he is all powerful; and has spread
Snares for thy father, which, if hitherto
He hath escaped them, is by fortune, not
By favour.
Ulric: Doth he personally know you?

Werner: No; but he guesses shrewdly at my person, As he betrayed last night; and I, perhaps, But owe my temporary liberty To his uncertainty.

Ulric: I think you wrong him, (Excuse me for the phrase); but Stralenheim Is not what you prejudge him, or, if so, He owes me something both for past and present: I saved his life, he therefore trusts in me; He hath been plundered too, since he came hither; Is sick; a stranger; and as such not now Able to trace the villain who hath robbed him: I have pledged myself to do so; and the business Which brought me here was chiefly that: but I Have found, in searching for another’s dross, My own whole treasure – you, my parents!

Werner (agitatedly): Who Taught you to mouth that name of “villain”? Ulric: What More noble name belongs to common thieves? Werner: Who taught you thus to brand an unknown being With an infernal stigma?

Ulric: My own feelings Taught me to name a ruffian from his deeds.

Werner: Who taught you, long-sought, and ill-found boy! that It would be safe for my own son to insult me?

Ulric: I named a villain. What is there in common With such a being and my father?

Werner: Everything!

Josephine: Oh, my son! Believe him not – and yet! (her voice falters)

Ulric (starts, looks earnestly at Werner, and then says slowly): And you avow it?

Werner: Ulric, before you dare despise your father, Learn to divine and judge his actions. Young, Rash, new to life, and reared in luxury’s lap, Is it for you to measure passion’s force, Or misery’s temptation? Wait (not long, It cometh like the night, and quickly) Wait! Wait till, like me, your hopes are blighted – till

81: Werner feels that in committing a common theft he has betrayed his noble name. “At the word villain, his lips quivered, and his eyes flashed fire. It was the vice of his character, ever to convert the subjects of self-reproach into those of indignation”

“And who,” said he, starting furiously from his seat, “has entitled you to brand thus with ignominious epithets a being you do not know? Who,” he added with increased agitation, “has taught you that it would be safe even for my son to insult me!”

“It is not necessary to know the person of a ruffian,” replied Conrad indignantly, “to give him the appellation he merits: – and what is there in common between my father and such a character?”

“Every thing,” said Siegendorf, bitterly – “for that ruffian was your father!” (Lee pp.185-6).
Sorrow and shame are handmaids of your cabin;
Famine and poverty your guests at table;
Despair your bed-fellow – then rise, but not
From sleep, and judge! Should that day e’er arrive –
Should you see then the serpent, who hath coiled
Himself around all that is dear and noble
Of you and yours, lie slumbering in your path,
With but his folds between your steps and happiness,
When he, who lives but to tear from you name,
Lands, life itself, lies at your mercy, with Chance your conductor; midnight for your mantle;
The bare knife in your hand, and earth asleap,
Even to your deadliest foe; and he as ’twere
Inviting death, by looking like it, while
His death alone can save you – thank your God!
If then, like me, content with petty plunder,
You turn aside – I did so.

Ulric: But –

Werner (abruptly):
Hear me!
I will not brook a human voice – scarce dare
Listen to my own (if that be human still)
Hear me! you do not know this man – I do.
He’s mean, deceitful, avaricious. You
Deem yourself safe, as young and brave; but learn
None are secure from desperation, few
From subtlety. My worst foe, Stralenheim,
Housed in a prince’s palace, couched within
A prince’s chamber, lay below my knife!
An instant – a mere motion – the least impulse –
Had swept him and all fears of mine from earth.
He was within my power – my knife was raised –
Withdrawn – and I’m in his – are you not so?
Who tells you that he knows you not? Who says
He hath not lured you here to end you? or
To plunge you, with your parents, in a dungeon?

82: Byron versifies Lee’s prose: “Conrad,” exclaimed the latter [Siegendorf], interpreting his looks, and in a tone that ill disguised the increasing anguish of his own soul, “before you thus presume to chastise me with your eye learn to understand my actions! – Young and inexperienced in the world – reposing hitherto in the bosom of indulgence and luxury, is it for you to judge the force of the passions, or the temptations of misery? – Wait till like me you have blighted your fairest hopes – have endured humiliation and sorrow – poverty and famine – before you pretend to judge of their effect on you!
Should that miserable day ever arrive – should you see the being at your mercy who stands between you, and every thing that is dear and noble in life! – Who is ready to tear from you your name – your inheritance – your very life itself – congratulate your own heart, if, like me, you are content with petty plunder, and are not tempted to exterminate a serpent, who now lives, perhaps, to sting us all!” (Lee, pp.187-8).

83: [Lee’s passage continues] “… You do not know this man,” continued he with the same incoherent eagerness, and impetuously silencing Conrad who would have spoken – “I do! – I believe him to be mean – sordid – deceitful! – You will conceive yourself safe because you are young and brave! –
Learn, however, from the two instances before you, none are so secure but desperation and subtlety may reach them! – Stralenheim in the palace of a prince was in my power! – my knife was held over him! – a single moment would have swept him from the face of the earth, and with him all my future
He pauses.

Ulric: Proceed – proceed!

Werner: Me he hath ever known, and hunted through each change of time – name – fortune – and why not you? Are you more versed in men? He wound snares round me; flung along my path reptiles, whom, in my youth, I would have spurned even from my presence; but, in spurning now, fill only with fresh venom. Will you be more patient? Ulric! Ulric! there are crimes made venial by the occasion, and temptations which nature cannot master or forbear.

Ulric (looks, first at him, and then at Josephine): My mother!

Werner: Aye! I thought so; you have now only one parent. I have lost alike father and son, and stand alone.

Ulric: But stay!

Werner rushes out of the chamber.84

Josephine (to Ulric): Follow him not, until this storm of passion abates. Thinkst thou that it were well for him I had not followed?

Ulric: I obey you, mother, although reluctantly. My first act shall not be one of disobedience.

Josephine: Oh! he is good! Condemn him, not from his own mouth, but trust to me, who have borne so much with him, and that this is but the surface of his soul, and that the depth is rich in better things.

Ulric: These then are but my father’s principles? My mother thinks not with him?

Josephine: Nor doth he think as he speaks. Alas! long years of grief have made him sometimes thus.

Ulric: Explain to me more clearly, then, these claims of Stralenheim, that, when I see the subject in its bearings, fears: – I forbore – I am now in his. – Are you certain that you are not so too? Who assures you he does not know you? Who tells you that he has not lured you into his society, either to rid himself of you for ever, or to plunge you with your family into a dungeon?” (Lee, p.188).

84: [Lee’s passage continues] “Me, it is plain, he has known invariably through every change of fortune or of name – and why not you? – Me he has enrapt – are you more discreet? He has wound the snares of Idenstein round me: – of a reptile, whom, a few years ago, I would have spurned from my presence, and whom, in spurning now, I have furnished with fresh venom: – Will you be more patient? – Conrad, Conrad, there are crimes rendered more venial by the occasion, and temptations too exquisite for human fortitude to master or endure.” The Count passionately struck his hand on his forehead as he spoke, and rushed out of the room (Lee, pp.188-9).
I may prepare to face him, or at least
To extricate you from your present perils.
I pledge myself to accomplish this – but would
I had arrived a few hours sooner!

Josephine: Aye!
Hadst thou but done so!

Enter Gabor and Idenstein, with attendants.

Gabor (to Ulric): I sought you, comrade.
So this is my reward!

Ulric: What do you mean?

Gabor: ’Sdeath! have I lived to these years, and for this!
(to Idenstein): But for your age and folly, I would –

Idenstein: Help!

Hands off! Touch an Intendant!

Gabor: Do not think
I’ll honour you so much as save your throat
From the Ravenstone, by choking you myself.

Idenstein: I thank you for the respite; but there
Those who have greater need of it than me.

Ulric: Unriddle this vile wrangling, or –

Gabor: At once, then,
The Baron has been robbed, and upon me
This worthy personage has deigned to fix
His kind suspicions – me! whom he ne’er saw
Till yester’ evening.

Idenstein: Wouldst have me suspect
My own acquaintances? You have to learn
That I keep better company.

Gabor: You shall
Keep the best shortly, and the last for all men,
The worms! you hound of malice!

Gabor seizes on him.

Ulric (interfering): Nay, no violence:
He’s old, unarmed – be temperate, Gabor!

Gabor (letting go Idenstein): True:
I am a fool to lose myself because
Fools deem me knave: it is their homage.

Ulric (to Idenstein): How Fare you?

Idenstein: Help!

Ulric: I have helped you.

Idenstein: Kill him! Then
I’ll say so.

85: BYRON’S NOTE: The Ravenstone, “Ravenstein”, is the stone gibbet of Germany, and so called from the ravens perching on it. See Manfred, rejected III i 59 and n.
Gabor: I am calm – live on!
Idenstein: That’s more
    Than you shall do, if there be judge or judgment
    In Germany. The Baron shall decide!
Gabor: Does he abet you in your accusation?
Idenstein: Does he not?
Gabor: Then next time let him go sink
    Ere I go hang for snatching him from drowning.
    But here he comes!

Enter Stralenheim.

Gabor (goes up to him): My noble lord, I’m here!
Stralenheim: Well, Sir!
Gabor: Have you aught with me?
Stralenheim: What should I
    Have with you?
Gabor: You know best, if yesterday’s
    Flood has not washed away your memory;
    But that’s a trifle. I stand here accused,
    In phrases not equivocal, by yon
    Intendant, of the pillage of your person,
    Or chamber – is the charge your own, or his?
Stralenheim: I accuse no man.
Gabor: Then you acquit me, Baron?
Stralenheim: I know not whom to accuse, or to acquit,
    Or scarcely to suspect.
Gabor: But you at least
    Should know whom not to suspect. I am insulted,
    Oppressed here by these menials, and I look
    To you for remedy – teach them their duty!
    To look for thieves at home were part of it,
    If duly taught; but, in one word, if I
    Have an accuser, let it be a man
    Worthy to be so of a man like me.
    I am your equal.
Stralenheim: You!
Gabor: Aye, Sir; and, for
    Aught that you know, superior; but proceed –
    I do not ask for hints, and surmises,
    And circumstance, and proofs; I know enough
    Of what I have done for you, and what you owe me,
    To have at least waited your payment rather Than paid myself, had I been eager of Your gold. I also know that were I even
    The villain I am deemed, the service rendered
    So recently would not permit you to Pursue me to the death, except through shame,
    Such as would leave your scutcheon but a blank.
    But this is nothing; I demand of you
Justice upon your unjust servants, and
From your own lips a disavowal of
All sanction of their insolence: thus much
You owe to the unknown, who asks no more,
And never thought to have asked so much.

Stralenheim: This tone
May be of innocence.

Gabor: 'Sdeath! who dare doubt it,
Except such villains as ne’er had it?

Stralenheim: You
Are hot, Sir.

Gabor: Must I turn an icicle
Before the breath of menials, and their master?

Stralenheim: Ulric! you know this man; I found him in Your company.

Gabor: We found you in the Oder:
Would we had left you there!

Stralenheim: I give you thanks, Sir.

Gabor: I’ve earned them; but might have earned more from others,
Perchance, if I had left you to your fate.

Stralenheim: Ulric! you know this man?

Gabor: No more than you do.
If he avouches not my honour.

Ulric: I
can vouch your courage, and, as far as my Own brief connexion led me, honour.

Stralenheim: Then
I’m satisfied.

Gabor (ironically): Right easily, methinks.
What is the spell in his asseveration
More than in mine?

Stralenheim: I merely said, that I
Was satisfied – not that you were absolved.

Gabor: Again! Am I accused or no?

Stralenheim: Go to!
You wax too insolent: if circumstance
And general suspicion be against you,
Is the fault mine? Is’t not enough that I
Decline all question of your guilt or innocence?

Gabor: My lord, my lord, this is mere cozenage,
A vile equivocation: you well know
Your doubts are certainties to all around you –
Your looks a voice – your frowns a sentence; you
Are practising your power on me – because
You have it; but beware, you know not whom
You strive to tread on.

86: Twice in three lines B. terminates a split pentameter with an isolated monosyllable, as if his scansion is motivated by arithmetic, not drama.
87: Echoes Bardolph at The Merry Wives of Windsor, IV v 58: Out, alas, Sir, cozenage, mere cozenage.
Stralenheim: Threat’st thou?
Gabor: Not so much
   As you accuse. You hint the basest injury,
   And I retort it with an open warning.
Stralenheim: As you have said, ’tis true I owe you
   For which you seem disposed to pay yourself’.
Gabor: Not with your gold.
Stralenheim: With bootless insolence. 269
(to his attendants and Idenstein): You need not further to molest this man,
   But let him go his way. Ulric, good morrow!

Exeunt Stralenheim, Idenstein, and attendants.

Gabor (following): I’ll after him, and –
Ulric (stopping him): Not a step.
Gabor: Who shall Oppose me?
Ulric: Your own reason, with a moment’s
   Thought.
Gabor: Must I bear this?
Ulric: Pshaw! We all must bear
   The arrogance of something higher than
   Ourselves – the highest cannot temper Satan,
   Nor the lowest his vicegerents upon earth.
   I’ve seen you brave the elements, and bear
   Things which had made this silk-worm cast his skin –
   And shrink you from a few sharp sneers and words? 280
Gabor: Must I bear to be deemed a thief? If ’twere
   A bandit of the woods, I could have borne it –
   There’s something daring in it – but to steal
   The monies of a slumbering man! –
 Ulric: It seems, then,
   You are not guilty?
Gabor: Do I hear aright?
   You too!
Ulric: I merely asked a simple question.
Gabor: If the judge asked me – I would answer “No” –
   To you I answer thus. (He draws.)
Ulric (drawing): With all my heart!
Josephine: Without there! Ho! help! help! Oh, God! here’s murder!

Exit Josephine, shrieking. Gabor and Ulric fight. Gabor is disarmed just as Stralenheim, Josephine, Idenstein, &c., re-enter.

Josephine: Oh! glorious Heaven! He’s safe!
Stralenheim (to Josephine): Who’s safe?
Josephine: My –
Ulric (interrupting her with a stern look, and turning afterwards to Stralenheim): Both! 290
Here’s no great harm done.
Stralenheim: What hath caused all this?
Ulric: You, Baron, I believe; but as the effect
Is harmless, let it not disturb you. Gabor!
There is your sword; and when you bare it next,
Let it not be against your friends.

Ulric pronounces the last words slowly and emphatically in a low voice to Gabor.

Gabor: I thank you
Less for my life than for your counsel.

Stralenheim: These
Brawls must end here.

Gabor (taking his sword): They shall. You have wronged me, Ulric,
More with your unkind thoughts than sword; I would
The last were in my bosom rather than
The first in yours. I could have borne yon noble’s
Absurd insinuations – Ignorance
And dull suspicion are a part of his
Intail will last him longer than his lands –
But I may fit him yet – you have vanquished me.
I was the fool of passion to conceive
That I could cope with you whom I had seen
Already proved by greater perils than Rest in this arm. We may meet by and by,
However – but in friendship.

Exit Gabor.

Stralenheim: I will brook
No more! This outrage following up his insults,
Perhaps his guilt, has cancelled all the little
I owed him heretofore for the so vaunted
Aid which he added to your abler succour.
Ulric, you are not hurt?

Ulric: Not even by a scratch.

Stralenheim (to Idenstein): Intendant! take your measures to secure
Yon fellow: I revoke my former lenity.
He shall be sent to Frankfort with an escort
The instant that the waters have abated.

Idenstein: Secure him! he hath got his sword again
And seems to know the use on’t; ’tis his trade,
Belike – I’m a civilian.

Stralenheim: Fool! are not
Yon score of vassals dogging at your heels
Enough to seize a dozen such? Hence! after him!

Ulric: Baron, I do beseech you!

Stralenheim: I must be Obeyed. No words!

Idenstein: Well, if it must be so –
March, vassals! I’m your leader – and will bring
The rear up: a wise general never should
Expose his precious life – on which all rests.
I like that article of war.

Exeunt Idenstein and attendants.

Stralenheim: Come hither,
Ulric – what does that woman here? Oh! now
I recognise her, ’tis the stranger’s wife
Whom they name “Werner”.

Ulric: ’Tis his name.

Stralenheim: Indeed!
Is not your husband visible, fair dame?

Josephine: Who seeks him?

Stralenheim: No one – for the present: but
I fain would parley, Ulric, with yourself
Alone.

Ulric: I will retire with you.

Josephine: Not so.
You are the latest stranger, and command
All places here. (aside to Ulric as she goes out): Oh! Ulric, have a care –
Remember what depends on a rash word!

Ulric (to Josephine): Fear not!

Exit Josephine.

Stralenheim: Ulric, I think that I may trust you?
You saved my life – and acts like these beget
Unbounded confidence.

Ulric: Say on.

Stralenheim: Mysterious
And long engendered circumstances (not
To be now fully entered on) have made
This man obnoxious – perhaps fatal to me.

Ulric: Who? Gabor, the Hungarian?

Stralenheim: No – this “Werner” –
With the false name and habit.

Ulric: How can this be?
He is the poorest of the poor – and yellow
Sickness sits caverned in his hollow eye:
The man is helpless.

Stralenheim: He is – ’tis no matter –
But if he be the man I deem (and that
He is so, all around us here – and much
That is not here – confirm my apprehension),
He must be made secure, ere twelve hours further.

Ulric: And what have I to do with this?

Stralenheim: I have sent
To Frankfort, to the governor, my friend
(I have the authority to do so by
An order of the house of Brandenburg)
For a fit escort – but this cursed flood
Bars all access, and may do for some hours.

Ulric: It is abating.
Stralenheim: That is well.
Ulric: But how
Am I concerned?
Stralenheim: As one who did so much
For me, you cannot be indifferent to
That which is of more import to me than
The life you rescued. Keep your eye on him!
The man avoids me, knows that I now know him.
Watch him! as you would watch the wild boar when
He makes against you in the hunter’s gap –
Like him, he must be speared.

Ulric: Why so?
Stralenheim: He stands
Between me and a brave inheritance!
Oh! could you see it! But you shall.

Ulric: I hope so.
Stralenheim: It is the richest of the rich Bohemia,
Unscathed by scorching war. It lies so near
The strongest city, Prague, that fire and sword
Have skimmed it lightly: so that now, besides
Its own exuberance, it bears double value
Confronted with whole realms afar and near
Made deserts.

Ulric: You describe it faithfully.
Stralenheim: Aye – could you see it, you would say so – but,
As I have said, you shall.

Ulric: I accept the omen.
Stralenheim: Then claim a recompense from it and me,
Such as both may make worthy your acceptance
And services to me and mine for ever.

Ulric: And this sole, sick, and miserable wretch –
This way-worn stranger – stands between you and
This Paradise? (aside) (As Adam did between The devil and his.)
Stralenheim: He doth.

Ulric: Hath he no right?
Stralenheim: Right! none. A disinherited prodigal,
Who for these twenty years disgraced his lineage
In all his acts – but chiefly by his marriage,
And living amidst commerce-fetching burghers,
And dabbling merchants, in a mart of Jews.

Ulric: He has a wife, then?
Stralenheim: You’d be sorry to Call such your mother. You have seen the woman
He calls his wife.
Ulric: Is she not so?
Stralenheim: No more
   Than he’s your father – an Italian girl,
   The daughter of a banished man, who lives
   On love and poverty with this same Werner. 88
Ulric: They are childless, then?
Stralenheim: There is or was a bastard,
   Whom the old man – the grandsire (as old age
   Is ever doting) took to warm his bosom,
   As it went chilly downward to the grave:
   But the imp stands not in my path – he has fled,
   No one knows whither; and if he had not,
   His claims alone were too contemptible
   To stand. Why do you smile?
Ulric: At your vain fears:
   A poor man almost in his grasp – a child
   Of doubtful birth – can startle a grandee!
Stralenheim: All’s to be feared, where all is to be gained.
Ulric: True; and aught done to save or to obtain it. 410
Stralenheim: You’ve harped the very string next to my heart. 89
   I may depend upon you?
Ulric: ’Twere too late
   To doubt it.
Stralenheim: Let no foolish pity shake
   Your bosom (for the appearance of the man
   Is pitiful); he is a wretch, as likely
   T’have robbed me as the fellow more suspected,
   Except that circumstance is less against him;
   He being lodged far off, and in a chamber
   Without approach to mine; and, to say truth,
   I think too well of blood allied to mine,
   To deem he would descend to such an act;
   Besides, he was a soldier, and a brave one
   Once – though too rash.
Ulric: And they, my lord, we know
   By our experience, never plunder till
   They knock the brains out first – which makes them heirs,
   Not thieves. The dead, who feel nought, can lose nothing,
   Nor e’er be robbed: their spoils are a bequest –
   No more.
Stralenheim: Go to! you are a wag. But say
   I may be sure you’ll keep an eye on this man,
   And let me know his slightest movement towards Concealment or escape?
Ulric: You may be sure
   You yourself could not watch him more than I
   Will be his sentinel.

88: Teresa Guiccioli’s father was “a banished man”, though she did not exactly live “in poverty” with
   B.
89: Echoes Macbeth, IV i 74: ... thou hast harped my fear aright ...
Stralenheim: By this, you make me
Yours, and for ever.\(^{90}\)
Ulric: Such is my intention.

\textit{Exeunt.}

\(^{90}\): Compare \textit{Othello}, III iii, last line: \textit{I am your own for ever.}
Act III scene i.

Scene I. – A Hall in the same Palace, from whence the secret passage leads.

Enter Werner and Gabor.

Gabor: Sir, I have told my tale; if it so please you
To give me refuge for a few hours, well –
If not – I’ll try my fortune elsewhere.

Werner: How
Can I, so wretched, give to misery
A shelter? wanting such myself as much
As e’er the hunted deer a covert –

Gabor: Or
The wounded lion his cool cave. Methinks
You rather look like one would turn at bay,
And rip the hunter’s entrails.

Werner: Ah?
Gabor: I care not
If it be so, being much disposed to do
The same myself; but will you shelter me?
I am oppressed like you – and poor like you –
Disgraced –

Werner (abruptly): Who told you that I was disgraced?
Gabor: No one; nor did I say you were so: with
Your poverty my likeness ended; but
I said I was so – and would add, with truth,
As undeservedly as you.

Werner: Again!
As I?
Gabor: Or any other honest man.
What the devil would you have? You don’t believe me
Guilty of this base theft?

Werner: No, no – I cannot.
Gabor: Why, that’s my heart of honour! yon young gallant –
Your miserly Intendant and dense noble –
All – all suspected me; and why? Because
I am the worst-clothed, and least named amongst them,
Although, were Momus’ lattice in our breasts,
My soul might brook to open it more widely
Than theirs; but thus it is – you poor and helpless –
Both still more than myself.

Werner: How know you that?
Gabor: You’re right; I ask for shelter at the hand

91: “According to the myth, Athene, Poseidon, and Hephaestus had a match in inventiveness. Poseidon made a bull, Athene planned a house, Hephaestus constructed a man; when they came before Momus, who was to judge, he examined their productions; I need not trouble you with his criticisms of the other two; but his objection to the man, and the fault he found with Hephaestus, was this: he should have made a window [B. s “lattice”] in his chest, so that, when it was opened, his thoughts and designs, his truth or falsehood, might have been apparent” – Lucian, Hermotimos.
Which I call helpless; if you now deny it,
I were well paid. But you, who seem to have proved
The wholesome bitterness of life, know well,
By sympathy, that all the outspread gold
Of the New World, the Spaniard boasts about,
Could never tempt the man who knows its worth,
Weighed at its proper value in the balance,
Save in such guise (and there I grant its power,
Because I feel it) as may leave no nightmare
Upon his heart o’ nights.

Werner: What do you mean?
Gabor: Just what I say; I thought my speech was plain:
You are no thief – nor I – and, as true men,
Should aid each other.

Werner: It is a damned world, sir.
Gabor: So is the nearest of the two next, as
The priests say (and no doubt they should know best),
Therefore I’ll stick by this – as being loth
To suffer martyrdom, at least with such
An epitaph as larceny upon my tomb.
It is but a night’s lodging which I crave;
Tomorrow I will try the waters, as
The dove did, trusting that they have abated.

Werner: Abated? Is there hope of that?
Gabor: There was
At noontide.
Werner: Then we may be safe.
Gabor: Are you
In peril?

Werner: Poverty is ever so.
Gabor: That I know by long practice. Will you not Promise to make mine less?
Werner: Your poverty?
Gabor: No – you don’t look a leech for that disorder;
I meant my peril only; you’ve a roof,
And I have none; I merely seek a covert.
Werner: Rightly; for how should such a wretch as I
Have gold?
Werner: Scarce honestly, to say the truth on’t,
Although I almost wish you had the Baron’s.
Werner: Dare you insinuate?
Gabor: What?
Werner: Are you aware
To whom you speak?
Gabor: No; and I am not used
Greatly to care. (a noise heard without) But hark! they come!
Werner: Who come?
Gabor: The Intendant and his man-hounds after me:
I’d face them – but it were in vain to expect
Justice at hands like theirs. Where shall I go?
But show me any place. I do assure you,
If there be faith in man, I am most guiltless:
Think if it were your own case!

Werner: (aside): Oh, just God!
Thy hell is not hereafter! Am I dust still?

Gabor: I see you’re moved; and it shows well in you:
I may live to requite it.

Werner: Are you not
A spy of Stralenheim’s?

Gabor: Not I! and if
I were, what is there to espy in you?
Although I recollect his frequent question
About you and your spouse, might lead to some Suspicion; but you best know – what – and why:
I am his deadliest foe.

Werner: You?

Gabor: After such
A treatment for the service which in part
I rendered him – I am his enemy;
If you are not his friend, you will assist

Werner: I will.

Gabor: But how?

Werner (showing the pannel): There is a secret spring;
Remember, I discovered it by chance,
And used it but for safety.

Gabor: Open it,
And I will use it for the same.

Werner: I found it,
As I have said: it leads through winding walls,
(So thick as to bear paths within their ribs,
Yet lose no jot of strength or stateliness),
And hollow cells, and obscure niches, to
I know not whither; you must not advance:
Give me your word.

Gabor: It is unnecessary:
How should I make my way in darkness, through
A Gothic labyrinth of unknown windings?

Werner: Yes, but who knows to what place it may lead?
I know not (mark you!) but who knows it might not Lead even into the chambers of your foe?
So strangely were contrived these galleries
By our Teutonic fathers in old days,
When man built less against the elements
Than his next neighbour. You must not advance
Beyond the two first windings; if you do
(Albeit I never passed them), I’ll not answer
For what you may be led to.

92: Compare Manfred, I i 250-1: I call upon thee! and compell / Thyself to be thy proper Hell!
93: Werner had assumed that he was himself Stralenheim’s worst enemy.
Gabor: But I will.
A thousand thanks!

Werner: You’ll find the spring more obvious
On the other side; and, when you would return,
It yields to the least touch.

Gabor: I’ll in – farewell!

Gabor goes in by the secret pannel.

Werner (solus): What have I done? Alas! what had I done
Before to make this fearful? Let it be
Still some atonement that I save the man,
Whose sacrifice had saved perhaps my own –
They come! to seek elsewhere what is before them!

Enter Idenstein and others.

Idenstein: Is he not here? He must have vanished then
Through the dim Gothic glass by pious aid
Of pictured saints, upon the red and yellow
Casements, through which the sunset streams like sunrise
On long pearl-coloured beards and crimson crosses,
And gilded crosiers, and crossed arms, and cowls,
And helms, and twisted armour, and long swords,
All the fantastic furniture of windows,
Dim with brave knights and holy hermits, whose Likeness and fame alike rest on some panes
Of chrysal, which each rattling wind proclaims
As frail as any other life or glory.94
He’s gone, however.

Werner: Whom do you seek?
Idenstein: A villain!

Werner: Why need you come so far, then?
Idenstein: In the search
Of him who robbed the Baron.

Werner: Are you sure
You have divined the man?
Idenstein: As sure as you
Stand there; but where’s he gone?

Werner: Who?
Idenstein: He we sought.95

Werner: You see he is not here.
Idenstein: And yet we traced him
Up to this hall: are you accomplices,
Or deal you in the black art?

Werner: I deal plainly,
To many men the blackest.

94: This speech (a) is difficult for the actor to breathe in and (b) does not seem characteristic of Idenstein.
95: Should be “Him we sought”.
Idenstein: It may be
I have a question or two for yourself
Hereafter; but we must continue now
Our search for t’other.

Werner: You had best begin
Your inquisition now; I may not be
So patient always.

Idenstein: I should like to know,
In good sooth, if you really are the man
That Stralenheim’s in quest of?

Werner: Insolent!
Said you not that he was not here?

Idenstein: Yes; one;
But there’s another whom he tracks more keenly,
And soon, it may be, with authority
Both paramount to his and mine.
But, come! Bustle, my boys! we are at fault.

Exit Idenstein and attendants.

Werner: In what
A maze hath my dim destiny involved me!
And one base sin hath done me less ill than
The leaving undone one far greater.
Down, Thou busy devil! rising in my heart!96
Thou art too late! I’ll nought to do with blood.

Enter Ulric.

Ulric: I sought you, father.

Werner: Is’t not dangerous?

Ulric: No; Stralenheim is ignorant of all
Or any of the ties between us: more –
He sends me here a spy upon your actions,
Deeming me wholly his.

Werner: I cannot think it:
’Tis but a snare he winds about us both,
To swoop the sire and son at once.

Ulric: I cannot
Pause in each petty fear, and stumble at
The doubts that rise like briars in our path,
But must break through them, as an unarmed carle
Would, though with naked limbs, were the wolf rustling
In the same thicket where he hewed for bread:
Nets are for thrushes, eagles are not caught so;
We’ll overfly, or rend them.

Werner: Show me how?

96: Echoes King Lear, II iv 56-7: Hysterica passio – down, thou climbing sorrow, / Thy element’s below.
Ulric: Can you not guess?
Werner: I cannot.
Ulric: That is strange.
Werner: I understand you not.
Ulric: Then we shall never more understand each other. But to change the topic –
Werner: You mean, to pursue it, as 'Tis of our safety.
Ulric: Right; I stand corrected. I see the subject now more clearly, and our general situation in its bearings. The waters are abating; a few hours will bring his summoned myrmidons from Frankfort, when you will be a prisoner, perhaps worse, and I an outcast, bastardized by practice of this same baron to make way for him.
Werner: And now your remedy! I thought to escape by means of this accursed gold, but now I dare not use it, show it, scarce look on it. Methinks it wears upon its face my guilt for motto, not the mintage of the state; and, for the sovereign's head, my own begirt with hissing snakes, which curl around my temples, and cry to all beholders – lo! a villain!
Ulric: You must not use it, at least, now; but take this ring.

He gives Werner a jewel.

Werner: A gem! It was my father's!
Ulric: And as such is now your own. With this you must bribe the Intendant for his old calèche and horses to pursue your route at sunrise, together with my mother.
Werner: And leave you, so lately found, in peril too?
Ulric: Fear nothing! The only fear were if we fled together, for that would make our ties beyond all doubt. The waters only lie in flood between this burgh and Frankfort; so far's in our favour. The route on to Bohemia, though encumbered, is not impassable; and when you gain a few hours' start, the difficulties will be the same to your pursuers. Once beyond

97: myrmidons – hired thugs, so named from Achilles' private army in the Iliad.
The frontier, and you’re safe.

Werner: My noble boy!
Ulric: Hush! hush! no transports: we’ll indulge in them
In Castle Siegendorf! Display no gold:
Show Idenstein the gem (I know the man,
And have looked through him). It will answer thus
A double purpose. Stralenheim lost gold –
No jewel: therefore, it could not be his;
And then the man, who was possessed of this,
Can hardly be suspected of abstracting
The Baron’s coin, when he could thus convert
This ring to more than Stralenheim has lost
By his last night’s slumber. Be not over timid
In your address, nor yet too arrogant,
And Idenstein will serve you.

Werner: I will follow
In all things your direction.

Ulric: I would have
Spared you the trouble; but had I appeared
To take an interest in you, and still more
By dabbling with a jewel in your favour,
All had been known at once.

Werner: My guardian angel!
This overpays the past. But how wilt thou
Fare in our absence?

Ulric: Stralenheim knows nothing
Of me as aught of kindred with yourself.
I will but wait a day or two with him
To lull all doubts, and then rejoin my father.

Werner: To part no more!
Ulric: I know not that; but at
The least we’ll meet again once more.

Werner: My boy –
My friend – my only child, and sole preserver!
Oh, do not hate me!

Ulric: Hate my father!
Werner: Aye,
My father hated me. Why not my son?

Ulric: Your father knew you not as I do.

Werner: Scorpions
Are in thy words! Thou know me? in this guise
Thou canst not know me, I am not myself,
Yet (hate me not) I will be soon.

Ulric: I’ll wait!
In the mean time be sure that all a son
Can do for parents shall be done for mine.

Werner: I see it, and I feel it, yet I feel
Further – that you despise me.

98: Idenstein has “a lattice in his breast” (see above, this scene, 25n).
Ulric: Wherefore should I?
Werner: Must I repeat my humiliation?
Ulric: No!
I have fathomed it and you. But let us talk
Of this no more. Or if it must be ever,
Not now; your error has redoubled all
The present difficulties of our house
At secret war with that of Stralenheim;
All we have now to think of, is to baffle
Him. I have shown one way.
Werner: The only one,
And I embrace it, as I did my son,
Who showed himself and father's safety in
One day.
Ulric: You shall be safe: let that suffice.
Would Stralenheim's appearance in Bohemia
Disturb your right, or mine, if once we were Admitted to our lands?
Werner: Assuredly,
Situates as we are now, although the first
Possessor might, as usual, prove the strongest,
Especially the next in blood.
Ulric: Blood! 'tis
A word of many meanings; in the veins
And out of them, it is a different thing
And so it should be, when the same in blood
(As it is called) are aliens to each other,
Like Theban brethren: 99 when a part is bad,
A few spilt ounces purify the rest.
Werner: I do not apprehend you.
Ulric: That may be –
And should, perhaps – and yet – but get ye ready:
You and my mother must away tonight.
Here comes the Intendant; sound him with the gem,
'Twill sink into his venal soul like lead
Into the deep, and bring up slime, and mud,
And ooze, too, from the bottom, as the lead doth
With its greased understratum, 100 but no less
Will serve to warn our vessels through these shoals.
The freight is rich, so heave the line in time!
Farewell! I scarce have time, but yet your hand,
My father! –
Werner: Let me embrace thee!
Ulric: We may be
Observed: subdue your nature to the hour!
Keep off from me as from your foe!
Werner: Accursed

99: Eteocles and Polynices, the sons of Oedipus, king of Thebes, slew each other in civil war.
100: An image from sounding the depth of the sea: the lead was greased with tallow to ascertain what kind of seabed the ship was over.
Be he, who is the stifling cause, which smothers
The best and sweetest feeling of our hearts,
At such an hour too!

Ulric: Yes, curse – it will ease you!
Here is the Intendant.

Enter Idenstein.

Master Idenstein,
How fare you in your purpose? Have you caught
The rogue?

Idenstein: No, faith!

Ulric: Well, there are plenty more:
You may have better luck another chase.

Where is the Baron?

Idenstein: Gone back to his chamber:
And now I think on’t, asking after you
With nobly-born impatience.

Ulric: Your great men
Must be answered on the instant, as the bound
Of the stung steed replies unto the spur:
'Tis well they have horses, too; for if they had not,
I fear that men must draw their chariots, as
They say kings did Sesostris.101

Idenstein: Who was he?

Ulric: An old Bohemian – an imperial gipsy.

Idenstein: A gipsy or Bohemian, 'tis the same,
For they pass by both names. And was he one?

Idenstein: A well-spoken, pretty-faced young man!
And prettily behaved! He knows his station,
You see, sir: how he gave to each his due
Precedence!

Werner: I perceived it, and applaud
His just discernment and your own.

Idenstein: That’s well –
That’s very well. You also know your place, too,
And yet I don’t know that I know your place.

Werner (showing the ring): Would this assist your knowledge?

Werner: A jewel!

Werner: ’Tis your own on one condition.

101: Sesostris – mythical king of Egypt who conquered the whole world and had kings draw his chariot, as Tamburlaine did. Mentioned in Herodotus and Diodoris Siculus. See AoB 45.
Idenstein: Mine! – Name it!
Werner: That hereafter you permit me
At thrice its value to redeem it; 'tis
A family ring.
Idenstein: A family! yours! a gem!
I’m breathless!
Werner: You must also furnish me
An hour ere daybreak with all means to quit
This place.
Idenstein: But is it real? let me look on it:
_Diamond_, by all that’s glorious!
Werner: Come, I’ll trust you;
You have guessed, no doubt, that I was born above
My present seeming.
Idenstein: I can’t say I did,
Though this looks like it; this is the true breeding
Of gentle blood!
Werner: I have important reasons
For wishing to continue privily
My journey hence.
Idenstein: So then, you are the man
Whom Stralenheim’s in quest of?
Werner: I am not;
But being taken for him might conduct
So much embarrassment to me just now,
And to the Baron’s self hereafter – 'tis
To spare both, that I would avoid all bustle.
Idenstein: Be you the man or no, 'tis not my business;
Besides, I never should obtain the half
From this proud, niggardly noble, who would raise
The country for some missing bits of coin,
And never offer a precise reward –
But this! another look!
Werner: Gaze on it freely;
At day-dawn it is yours.
Idenstein: Oh, thou sweet sparkler!
Thou more than stone of the philosopher!
Thou touchstone of philosophy herself!
Thou bright eye of the mine! thou load-star of
The soul! the true magnetic pole to which
All hearts point duly north, like trembling needles!
Thou flaming Spirit of the Earth! which sitting
High on the monarch’s diadem, attractest
More worship than the majesty who sweats
Beneath the crown which makes his head ache, like
Millions of hearts which bleed to lend it lustre!
Shalt thou be mine? I am, methinks, already
A little king, a lucky alchemist!
A wise magician, who has bound the devil
Without the forfeit of his soul. But come,
Werner, or what else?\textsuperscript{102}

Werner: Call me Werner still,
You may yet know me by a loftier title.

Idenstein: I do believe in thee! thou art the spirit
Of whom I long have dreamed, in a low garb –
But come, I’ll serve thee; thou shalt be as free
As air,\textsuperscript{103} despite the waters; let us hence,
I’ll show thee I am honest (oh, thou jewel!)
Thou shalt be furnished, Werner, with such means
Of flight, that if thou wert a snail, not birds
Should overtake thee. Let me gaze again!
I have a foster-brother in the mart
Of Hamburgh, skilled in precious stones – how many Carats may it weigh? Come, Werner, I will wing thee.

\textit{Exeunt.}

\textsuperscript{102}: This is one of the best speeches in the play, and the way the character suddenly comes to life shows how good a dramatist B. might have become had he lived. All Lee gives is, “He produced the jewel. Idenstein started with astonishment! Chance, and some commercial connexions, made him a judge of its value. He looked earnestly at it, and considered long” (Lee, p.206).

\textsuperscript{103}: An inappropriate echo of Prospero’s words to Ariel at \textit{The Tempest} I ii 499.
ACT III scene ii.

Stralenheim’s chamber.
Stralenheim and Fritz.

Fritz: All’s ready, my good lord!
Stralenheim: I am not sleepy,
And yet I must to bed; I fain would say
To rest, but something heavy on my spirit,
Too dull for wakefulness, too quick for slumber,
Sits on me as a cloud along the sky,
Which will not let the sunbeams through, nor yet
Descend in rain and end, but spreads itself
’Twixt earth and heaven, like envy between man
And man, an everlasting mist – I will Unto my pillow.

Fritz: May you rest there well! 10
Stralenheim: I feel, and fear, I shall.
Fritz: And wherefore fear?
Stralenheim: I know not why, and therefore do fear more,
Because an undescribable – but ’tis
All folly. Were the locks (as I desired)
Changed, today, of this chamber? For last night’s
Adventure makes it needful.

Fritz: Certainly,
According to your order, and beneath
The inspection of myself and the young Saxon
Who saved your life. I think they call him “Ulric”.
Stralenheim: You think! you supercilious slave! What right 20
Have you to tax your memory, which should be
Quick, proud, and happy to retain the name
Of him who saved your master, as a litany
Whose daily repetition marks your duty
Get hence! “you think”, indeed! you who stood still Howling and dripping on the bank, whilst I
Lay dying, and the stranger dashed aside
The roaring torrent, and restored me to
Thank him – and despise you. “You think”! and scarce
Can recollect his name! I will not waste 30
More words on you. Call me betimes.

Fritz: Good night!
I trust tomorrow will restore your lordship
To renovated strength and temper.

The scene closes.
Act III scene iii.

The secret passage.

Gabor (solus):

Five – six hours have I counted, like the guard
Of outposts on the never-merry clock:
That hollow tongue of time, which, even when
It sounds for joy, takes something from enjoyment
With every clang. ’Tis a perpetual knell,
Though for a marriage feast it rings: each stroke
Peals for a hope the less: the funeral note
Of love deep-buried without resurrection
In the grave of possession; while the knoll
Of long-lived parents finds a jovial echo
To triple time in the son’s ear. 105

I’m cold –

I’m dark – I’ve blown my fingers – numbered o’er
And o’er my steps – and knocked my head against
Some fifty buttresses and roused the rats
And bats in general insurrection, till
Their cursed pattering feet and whirring wings
Leave me scarce hearing for another sound.

A light! It is at distance (if I can Measure in darkness distance); but it blinks
As though a crevice or a key-hole, in
The inhibited direction; I must on,
Nevertheless, from curiosity,
A distant lamp-light is an incident
In such a den as this. Pray Heaven it lead me
To nothing that may tempt me! Else – Heaven aid me
To obtain or to escape it! Shining still!
Were it the Star of Lucifer himself,
Or he himself girt with its beams, I could Contain no longer. Softly! mighty well!

That corner’s turned – So – Ah! no – right! it draws
Nearer. Here is a darksome angle – so,
That’s weathered. Let me pause. Suppose it leads Into some greater danger than that which
I have escaped – no matter, ’tis a new one;
And novel perils, like fresh mistresses,
Wear more magnetic aspects. I will on,
And be it where it may – I have my dagger,
Which may protect me at a pinch. Burn still.
Thou little light! Thou art my ignis fatuus. 106

104: B.’s splitting a pentameter across a scene-change seems to show that he doesn’t understand what split pentameters are for.
105: The split pentameter within the soliloquy presumably indicates a pause.
106: The ignis fatuus or will’o’th’wisp is one of B.’s favourite images – compare PoC 35, Manfred, 1 i 195, Don Juan, XI, 27, 6-8, TVoJ 105, 5, and Island IV 86.
My stationary will o’ the wisp! So! so!
He hears my invocation, and fails not.

The scene closes.
Act III scene iv.

A garden. Enter Werner.

Werner: I could not sleep — and now the hour’s at hand; All’s ready. Idenstein has kept his word; And, stationed in the outskirts of the town, Upon the forest’s edge, the vehicle Awaits us. Now the dwindling stars begin To pale in Heaven; and far the last time I Look on these horrible walls. Oh! never, never Shall I forget them. Here I came most poor, But not dishonoured: and I leave them with A stain — if not upon my name, yet in My heart! A never-dying canker-worm, Which all the coming splendour of the lands, And rights, and sovereignty of Siegendorf, Can scarcely lull a moment: I must find Some means of restitution, which would ease My soul in part; but how without discovery? It must be done, however: and I’ll pause Upon the method the first hour of safety. The madness of my misery led to this Base infamy; repentance must retrieve it: I will have nought of Stralenheim’s upon My spirit, though he would grasp all of mine; Lands, freedom, life — and yet he sleeps! as sound Perhaps, as infancy, with gorgeous curtains Spread for his canopy, o’er silken pillows, Such as when — Hark! what noise is that? Again! The branches shake; and some loose stones have fallen From yonder terrace.

Ulric leaps down from the terrace.

Ulric! ever welcome!

Ulric: Thrice welcome now! this filial —

Stop! Before We approach, tell me —

Why look you so?

Do I Behold my father, or —

What?

An assassin?

Insane or insolent!

Reply, sir, as

You prize your life or mine!

To what must I

Answer?

Are you or are you not the assassin
Of Stralenheim?

Werner: I never was as yet
The murderer of any man. What mean you?

Ulric: Did you not this night (as the night before)
Retrace the secret passage? Did you not Again revisit Stralenheim’s chamber? and –

Ulric pauses.

Werner: Proceed.

Ulric: Died he not by your hand? 107

Werner: Great God! 40

Ulric: You are innocent, then! my father’s innocent!
Embrace me! Yes – your tone – your look – yes –
Yet say so!

Werner: If I e’er, in heart or mind,
Conceived deliberately such a thought,
But rather strove to trample back to hell
Such thoughts – if e’er they glared a moment through
The irritation of my oppressed spirit,
May Heaven be shut for ever from my hopes
As from mine eyes! 108

Ulric: But Stralenheim is dead.

Werner: ’Tis horrible! ’tis hideous, as ’tis hateful!
But what have I to do with this?

Ulric: No bolt
Is forced; no violence can be detected,
Save on his body. Part of his own household
Have been alarmed; but as the Intendant is Absent, I took upon myself the care
Of mustering the police. His chamber has,
Past doubt, been entered secretly. Excuse me,
If nature –

Werner: Oh, my boy! what unknown woes
Of dark fatality, like clouds, are gathering
Above our house!

Ulric: My father! I acquit you!

107: “Stop!” said the latter [Conrad / Ulric], in an imperious, though smothered tone, and while they were yet at some paces’ distance, “Before we approach each other, tell me whether I see my father or a murderer?” – Siegendorf paused in astonishment; but unable to understand him, again advanced near enough to perceive that he was extremely pale and agitated beyond all convolutions of the soul.

“Answer, as you value the life of either!” again exclaimed Conrad, motioning his father from him.

“Insolent young man! To what would you have me answer?”

“Are you, or are you not, the murderer of Baron Stralenheim?”

“I was never yet the murderer of any man,” replied the Count fiercely; and starting in his turn some paces back; – “What is it you mean?”

“Did you not last night enter the secret gallery? – Did you not penetrate the chamber of Stralenheim? – Did he” — and his voice suddenly faltered, – “Did he not die privately by your hand?” (Lee, pp.250-1).

108: “You are then innocent?” said Conrad, emphatically. – In terms fearfully solemn, the Count uttered an imprecation on himself, if his hand had ever executed, or his heart conceived, a project of deliberate assassination (Lee, p.252).
But will the world do so? Will even the judge,
If – but you must away this instant.

Werner: No! I’ll face it. Who shall dare suspect me?
Ulric: You had no guests – no visitors – no life
Breathing around you, save my mother’s?
Werner: Ah!
Ulric: The Hungarian!
Werner: No; I hid him in that very Concealed and fatal gallery.
Ulric: There I’ll find him.¹⁰⁹

Ulric is going.

Werner: It is too late: he had left the palace ere
I quitted it. I found the secret pannel
Open; and the doors which lead from that hall
Which masks it: I but thought he had snatched the silent
And favourable moment to escape
The myrmidons of Idenstein, who were
Dogging him yestereven.
Ulric: You re-closed
The pannel?
Werner: Yes; and not without reproach
(And inner trembling for the avoided peril)
At his dull heedlessness, in leaving thus
His shelterer’s asylum to the risk
Of a discovery.
Ulric: You are sure you closed it?
Werner: Certain.
Ulric: That’s well: but had been better, if
You ne’er had turned it to a den for –

He pauses.

Werner: Thieves!
Thou wouldst say: I must bear it, and deserve it;
But not –
Ulric: No, Father; do not speak of this;
This is no hour to think of petty crimes,

¹⁰⁹: Siegendorf suddenly struck his hands together, and repeated the name of the Hungarian.
“He is gone – he went yesterday!”!
“No – he returned!”
“When? – At what time?”
“Last night!”
“And he slept —”
“In the only chamber I had to offer him – the last, and dangerous one!” – Conrad, without speaking, made a hasty impatient motion towards the house (Lee, p.254).
But to prevent the consequence of great ones.
Why would you shelter this man?
Werner: Could I shun
A man pursued by my chief foe; disgraced
For my own crime; a victim to my safety,
Imploring a few hours’ concealment from
The very wretch who was the cause he needed
Such refuge. Had he been a wolf, I could not
Have, in such circumstances, thrust him forth.
Ulric: And like the wolf he hath repaid you.
It is too late to ponder this: you must Set out ere dawn. I will remain here to Trace out the murder, if 'tis possible.
Werner: But this my sudden flight will give Suspicion: two new victims, in the lieu
Of one, if I remain. The fled Hungarian,
Who seems the culprit, and –
Ulric: Who seems? Who else
Can be so?
Werner: Not I, though just now you doubted –
You, my son! doubted –
Ulric: And do you doubt of him
The fugitive?
Werner: Boy! since I fell into
The abyss of crime (though not of such crime), I
Having seen the innocent oppressed for me,
May doubt even of the guilty’s guilt. Your heart
Is free, and quick with virtuous wrath to accuse
Appearances; and views a criminal
In Innocence’s shadow, it may be,
Because 'tis dusky.
Ulric: And if I do so,
What will mankind, who know you not, or knew
But to oppress? You must not stand the hazard.
Away! I’ll make all easy. Idenstein
Will for his own sake and his jewel’s hold
His peace – he also is a partner in
Your flight – moreover –
Werner: Fly! and leave my name
Linked with the Hungarian’s, or preferred as poorest,
To bear the brand of bloodshed?
Ulric: Pshaw! leave anything
Except our father’s sovereignty and castles,
For which you have so long panted and in vain!
What name? You leave no name, since that you bear
Is feigned.
Werner: Most true; but still I would not have it
Engraved in crimson in men’s memories,
Though in this most obscure abode of men
Besides, the search –
Ulric: I will provide against Aught that can touch you. No one knows you here As heir of Siegendorf: if Idenstein Suspects, 'tis but suspicion, and he is A fool: his folly shall have such employment, Too, that the unknown Werner shall give way To nearer thoughts of self. The laws (if e'er Laws reached this village) are all in abeyance With the late general war of thirty years, Or crushed, or rising slowly from the dust, To which the march of armies trampled them. Stralenheim, although noble, is unheeded Here, save as such – without lands, influence, Save what hath perished with him; few prolong A week beyond their funeral rites their sway O'er men, unless by relatives, whose interest Is roused: such is not here the case; he died Alone, unknown – a solitary grave, Obscure as his deserts, without a scutcheon, Is all he'll have, or wants. If I discover The assassin, 'twill be well – if not, believe me None else; though all the full fed train of menials May howl above his ashes (as they did Around him in his danger on the Oder), Will no more stir a finger now than then. Hence! hence! I must not hear your answer – look! The stars are almost faded, and the gray Begins to grizzle the black hair of night. You shall not answer – pardon me, that I Am peremptory, 'tis your son that speaks, Your long-lost, late-found son – Let's call my mother! Softly and swiftly step, and leave the rest To me; I'll answer for the event as far As regards you, and that is the chief point, As my first duty, which shall be observed. We'll meet in Castle Siegendorf – once more Our banners shall be glorious! Think of that Alone, and leave all other thoughts to me, Whose youth may better battle with them – Hence! And may your age be happy! I will kiss My mother once more, then Heaven's speed be with you!

Werner: This counsel's safe – but is it honourable?
Ulric: To save a father is a child's chief honour.

Exeunt.
Scene I. – A Gothic Hall in the Castle of Siegendorf, near Prague.

Enter Eric and Henrick, retainers of the Count.

Eric: So, better times are come at last; to these Old walls new masters and high wassail, both A long desideratum.

Henrick: Yes, for masters, It might be unto those who long for novelty, Though made by a new grave: but as for wassail, Methinks the old Count Siegendorf maintained His feudal hospitality as high As e’er another prince of the empire.

Eric: Why, For the mere cup and trencher, we no doubt Fared passing well; but as for merriment And sport, without which salt and sauces season The cheer but scantly, our sizings were Even of the narrowest.

Henrick: The old Count loved not The roar of revel; are you sure that this does? Eric: As yet he hath been courteous as he’s bounteous, And we all love him.

Henrick: His reign is as yet Hardly a year o’erpast its honeymoon, And the first year of sovereigns is bridal; Anon, we shall perceive his real sway And moods of mind.

Eric: Pray Heaven he keep the present! Then his brave son, Count Ulric – there’s a knight! Pity the wars are o’er!

Henrick: Why so? Eric: Look on him!

Henrick: He’s very youthfull, And strong and beautiful as a young tiger.

Eric: That’s not a faithful vassal’s likeness.

Henrick: But Perhaps a true one.

Eric: Pity, as I said, The wars are over: in the hall, who like Count Ulric for a well-supported pride, Which awes but yet offends not, in the field, Who like him with his spear in hand, when, gnashing His tusks, and ripping up from right to left The howling hounds, the boar makes for the thicket?

112: Compare the servants’ choric and expository dialogue at the start of Manfred, III i.
Who backs a horse, or bears a hawk, or wears
A sword like him? Whose plume nods knightlier?

Henrick: No one’s, I grant you: do not fear, if war
Be long in coming, he is of that kind
Will make it for himself, if he hath not Already done as much.

Eric: What do you mean?

Henrick: You can’t deny his train of followers
(But few our fellow native vassals born
On the domain) are such a sort of knaves
As – (pauses)

Eric: What?

Henrick: The wars (you love so much) leaves living;
Like other parents, she spoils her worst children!

Eric: Nonsense! they are all brave iron-visaged fellows,
Such as old Tilly loved.

Henrick: And who loved Tilly?
Ask that at Magdeburg — or for that matter
Wallenstein either – they are gone to –

Eric: Rest;
But what beyond ‘tis not ours to pronounce.
The country (nominally now at peace)
Is overrun with – God knows who – they fly
By night, and disappear with sunrise; but Leave no less desolation, nay, even more
Than the most open warfare.

Eric: But Count Ulric –

Henrick: With him!
He – might prevent it. As you say, he’s fond
Of war; why makes he it not on those marauders?

Eric: You’d better ask himself.

Henrick: I would as soon
Ask of the lion why he laps not milk.

Eric: And here he comes!

Henrick: The devil! you’ll hold your tongue?

Eric: Why do you turn so pale?

Henrick: ’Tis nothing – but
Be silent!

Eric: I will upon what you’ve said.

Henrick: I assure you I meant nothing, a mere sport
Of words, no more; besides, had it been otherwise,
He is to espouse the gentle Baroness
Ida of Stralenheim, the late Baron’s heiress,
And she no doubt will soften whatsoever
Of fierceness the late long intestine wars
Have given all natures, and most unto those.

113: B. would have read about the cruelty of Tilly’s troops at Magdeburg at Hare-Naylor, I 498-507, or Coxe, IV 101-3.
Who were born in them, and bred up upon
The knees of homicide; sprinkled, as it were,
With blood even at their baptism. Prithee, peace
On all that I have said!

Enter Ulric and Rodolph.\textsuperscript{114}

Good morrow, Count!

Ulric: Good morrow, worthy Henrick. Eric, is
All ready for the chase?

Eric: The dogs are ordered
Down to the forest, and the vassals out
To beat the bushes, and the day looks promising.
Shall I call forth your Excellency’s suite?
What courser will you please to mount?

Ulric: The dun, Walstein.\textsuperscript{115}

Eric: I fear he scarcely has recovered
The toils of Monday: ’twas a noble chase,
You speared four with your own hand.

Ulric: True, good Eric, I had forgotten – let it be the grey then,
Old Ziska:\textsuperscript{116} he has not been out this fortnight.

Eric: He shall be strait caparisoned. How many
Of your immediate retainers shall Escort you?

Ulric: I leave that to Weilburg, our Master of the Horse.

Exit Eric.

Rodolph!

Rudolph: My lord?
Ulric: The news
Is awkward from the –

\textit{Rodolph points to Henrick.}

How now, Henrick, why
Loiter you here?

Henrick: For your commands, my lord.
Ulric: Go to my father, and present my duty,
And learn if he would aught with me before
I mount.

Exit Henrick.

\textsuperscript{114}: Rodolph was the name of the Austrian Emperor who succeeded Maximilian II: Hare-Naylor I 10. Coxe spells him “Rhodolph”.
\textsuperscript{115}: The horse is named after Wallenstein. “Walstein” is a corruption of “Waldstein” or “Wallenstein”.
\textsuperscript{116}: The horse is named after the Hussite leader referred to at I i 695.
Rodolph, our friends have had a check
Upon the frontiers of Franconia, and
'Tis rumoured that the column sent against them
Is to be strengthened. I must join them soon.

Rodolph: Best wait for further and more sure advices.
Ulric: I mean it – and indeed it could not well
Have fallen out at a time more opposite
To all my plans.

Rodolph: It will be difficult
To excuse your absence to the Count, your father.
Ulric: Yes, but the unsettled state of our domain
In high Silesia will permit and cover
My journey. In the mean time, when we are Engaged in the chase, draw off the eighty men
Whom Wolffe leads – keep the forests on your route:
You know it well?

Rodolph: As well as on that night
When we –
Ulric: We will not speak of that until
We can repeat the same with like success;
And when you have joined, give Rosenberg this letter.

Gives a letter.

Add further, that I have sent this slight addition
To our force with you and Wolffe, as herald of
My coming, though I could but spare them ill
At this time, as my father loves to keep
Full numbers of retainers round the castle,
Until this marriage, and its feasts and fooleries,
Are rung out with its peal of nuptial nonsense.

Rodolph: I thought you loved the lady Ida?
Ulric: Why I do so – but it follows not from that
I would bind in my youth and glorious years,
So brief and burning, with a lady’s zone,
Although ’twere that of Venus – but I love her,
As woman should be loved, fairly and solely.

Rodolph: And constantly?
Ulric: I think so; for I love
Nought else. But I have not the time to pause
Upon these gewgaws of the heart. Great things

117: Hare-Naylor has “After various skirmishes with the enemy on the borders of Franconia …” (II 49).
118: Ulric does not seem whole-heartedly committed to heterosexuality; though the fact that he killed the father of his proposed fiancée would make him pause. Lee describes him (as Conrad), thus: “Conrad, ever meditative and silent … manifested the same reserve, the same abstraction, the same haughty distrust. He neither appeared to give, nor take joy: every eye had sunk before his, and every voice had been hushed into silence. Neither his youth, the grandeur of his person, nor that lustre which attends the rights of an heir, had created any exultation in his presence. Even the most indulgent of his parents had discovered that he was not beloved; and the feelings of both had secretly assigned the reason – he was not capable of loving” (Lee, p.297).
We have to do ere long. Speed! Speed! good Rodolph!

Rodolph: On my return, however, I shall find
The Baroness Ida lost in Countess Siegendorf?

Ulric: Perhaps: my father wishes it, and, sooth,
'Tis no bad policy; this union with
The last bud of the rival branch at once
Unites the future and destroys the past.¹¹⁹

Rodolph: Adieu!

Ulric: Yet hold – we’d better keep together
Until the chase begins; then draw thou off,
And do as I have said.

Rodolph: I will. But to Return – ’twas a most kind act in the Count,
Your father, to send up to Königsberg
For this fair orphan of the Baron, and
To hail her as his daughter.

Ulric: Wondrous kind!
Especially as little kindness till
Then grew between them.

Rodolph: The late Baron died
Of a fever, did he not?

Ulric: How should I know?

Rodolph: I have heard it whispered there was something strange
About his death – and even the place of it
Is scarcely known.

Ulric: Some obscure village on
The Saxon or Silesian frontier.

Rodolph: He
Has left no testament – no farewell words?

Ulric: I am neither confessor nor notary,
So cannot say.

Rodolph: Ah! here’s the lady Ida.

Enter Ida Stralenheim.¹²⁰

Ulric: You are early, my sweet cousin!
Ida: Not too early,
Dear Ulric, if I do not interrupt you.
Why do you call me “Cousin”?

Ulric (smiling): Are we not so?
Ida: Yes, but I do not like the name; methinks
It sounds so cold, as if you thought upon
Our pedigree, and only weighed our blood.

Ulric (starting): Blood!¹²¹
Ida: Why does yours start from your cheek?
Ulric: Ay – doth it?

¹¹⁹: A remote echo of B.’s love for Mary Chaworth, whose grandfather had been killed in a duel by his great-uncle.
¹²⁰: Stralenheim’s daughter is in neither Lee nor GDD: she is B.’s invention.
¹²¹: Recollecting that he killed her father.
Ida: It doth— but no! it rushes like a torrent
Even to your brow again.

Ulric (recovering himself): And if it fled,
It only was because your presence sent it
Back to my heart, which beats for you, sweet cousin!

Ida: “Cousin” again!

Ulric: Nay, then I’ll call you sister.

Ida: I like that name still worse—would we had ne’er
Been aught of kindred!

Ulric (gloomily): Would we never had!

Ida: Oh heaven! and can you wish that?

Ulric: Dearest Ida!

Ida: Did I not echo your own wish?

Ulric: Yes, Ulric,

Ida: But then I wished it not with such a glance,
And scarce knew what I said; but let me be Sister, or cousin, what you will, so that
I still to you am something.

Ulric: You shall be

Ida: And you to me are so already;
But I can wait.

Ulric: Dear Ida!

Ida: Call me Ida,

Your Ida, for I would be yours, none else’s;
Indeed, I have none else left, since my poor father—

She pauses.

Ulric: You have mine— you have me.

Ida: Dear Ulric, how I wish
My father could but view our happiness,
Which wants but this!

Ulric: Indeed! You would have loved him,
He you; for the brave ever love each other:
His manner was a little cold, his spirit
Proud (as is birth’s prerogative), but under
This grave exterior—would you had known each other!
Had such as you been near him on his journey,
He had not died without a friend to soothe
His last and lonely moments.

Ulric: Who says that?

Ida: What?

Ulric: That he died alone.

Ida: The general rumour,
And disappearance of his servants, who
Have ne’er returned: that fever was most deadly
Which swept them all away.

Ulric: If they were near him,
He could not die neglected or alone.
Ida:  Alas! what is a menial to a death-bed, When the dim eye rolls vainly round for what It loves? they say he died of a fever.
Ulric:  Say!  It was so.
Ida:  I sometimes dream otherwise.
Ulric:  All dreams are false.
Ida:  And yet I see him as I see you.
Ulric:  Where?
Ida:  In sleep – I see him lie Pale, bleeding, and a man with a raised knife Beside him.
Ulric:  But you do not see his face?
Ida (looking at him):  No! Oh, my God! do you?
Ulric:  Why do you ask?
Ida:  Because you look as if you saw a murderer!
Ulric (agitately):  Ida, this is mere childishness; your weakness Infects me, to my shame; but as all feelings Of yours are common to me, it affects me.
  Prithee, sweet child, change –
Ida:  Child, indeed! I have Full fifteen summers!

A bugle sounds.

Rodolph:  Hark, my lord, the bugle!
Ida (peeishly to Rodolph):  Why need you tell him that? Can he not hear it Without your echo?
Rodolph:  Pardon me, fair Baroness!
Ida:  I will not pardon you, unless you earn it By aiding me in my dissuasion of Count Ulric from the chase today.
Rodolph:  You will not, Lady, need aid of mine.
Ulric:  I must not now Forego it.
Ida:  But you shall!
Ulric:  Shall!
Ida:  Yes, or be No true knight. Come, dear Ulric! yield to me In this, for this one day; the day looks heavy, And you are turned so pale and ill.
Ulric:  You jest.
Ida:  Indeed I do not – ask of Rodolph.
Rodolph:  Truly, My lord, within this quarter of an hour

122: Compare Hamlet, I ii 184-5.
You have changed more than I e’er saw you change
In years.

Ulric: ’Tis nothing; but if ’twere, the air
Would soon restore me. I’m the true cameleon,
And live but on the atmosphere; your feasts
In castle halls, and social banquets, nurse not
My spirit – I’m a forester and breather
Of the steep mountain-tops, where I love all
The eagle loves.

Ida: Except his prey, I hope.

Ulric: Sweet Ida, wish me a fair chase, and I
Will bring you six boars’ heads for trophies home.

Ida: And will you not stay, then? You shall not go!

Come! I will sing to you.

Ulric: Ida, you scarcely
Will make a soldier’s wife.

Ida: I do not wish
To be so; for I trust these wars are over,
And you will live in peace on your domains.

Enter Werner as Count Siegendorf.

Ulric: My father, I salute you, and it grieves me
With such brief greeting. You have heard our bugle;
The vassals wait.

Siegendorf: So let them – you forget
Tomorrow is the appointed festival
In Prague for peace restored. You are apt to follow
The chase with such an ardour as will scarce
Permit you to return today, or if
Returned, too much fatigued to join tomorrow
The nobles in our marshalled ranks.

Ulric: You, Count,
Will well supply the place of both – I am not
A lover of these pageantries.

Siegendorf: No, Ulric;
It were not well that you alone of all
Our young nobility –

Ida: And far the noblest
In aspect and demeanour.

Siegendorf (to Ida): True, dear child,
Though somewhat frankly said for a fair damsel.
But, Ulric, recollect too our position,
So lately re-instated in our honours.
Believe me, ’twould be marked in any house,
But most in ours, that ONE should be found wanting
At such a time and place. Besides, the Heaven

123: Compare Hamlet III ii 91-2.
124: Compare Lady Mortimer singing to Hotspur et al at Henry IV I, III i 245 (Hotspur does not welcome it); or Medora offering to sing to Conrad at The Corsair 436 (he doesn’t want to hear her).
Which gave us back our own, in the same moment
It spread its Peace o’er all, hath double claims
On us for thanksgiving; first, for our country,
And next, that we are here to share its blessings.

Ulric (aside): Devout, too! Well, sir, I obey at once.
(Then aloud to a servant):
Ludwig, dismiss the train without!

Exit Ludwig.

Ida: And so
You yield at once to him what I for hours
Might supplicate in vain.

Siegendorf (smiling): You are not jealous
Of me, I trust, my pretty rebel! Who Would sanction disobedience against all
 Except thyself? But fear not, thou shalt rule him
Hereafter with a fonder sway and firmer.

Ida: But I should like to govern now.

Siegendorf: You shall,
Your harp, which by the way awaits you with
The Countess in her chamber. She complains
That you are a sad truant to your music:
She attends you.

Ida: Then good morrow, my kind kinsmen!

Ulric: By and by.

Ida: Be sure I’ll sound it better than your bugles;
Then pray you be as punctual to its notes:
I’ll play you King Gustavus’ march.125

Ulric: And why not Old Tilly’s?

Ida: Not that monster’s!126 I should think
My harp-strings rang with groans, and not with music,
Could aught of his sound on it; but come quickly;
Your mother will be eager to receive you.

Exit Ida.

Siegendorf: Ulric, I wish to speak with you alone.

Ulric: My time’s your vassal.

(Aside to Rodolph): Rodolph, hence! and do
As I directed; and by his best speed

125: This is like a northern lady in the American Civil War offering to play Dixie. Gustavus was protestant; Tilly (next line) was, like this family, catholic.
126: For Tilly’s cruelty, see above, IV i 47 and n. “Now [on one of Tilly’s expeditions] were Pagan, Lutzen, Waisenfelt, and other places spoilt. Here were the ladies and gentlewomen, and others, like beasts and dogges yoked and coupled together to be led into the woods and ravished, who for resisting had their clothes stript off, their bodies whipt, their eares cropt, and so sent back again” (Hare-Naylor II, p.549n).
And readiest means let Rosenberg reply.

Rodolph: Count Siegendorf, command you aught? I am bound
Upon a journey past the frontier.

Siegendorf (starts): Ah!
Where? on what frontier?

Rodolph: The Silesian, on
My way – (aside to Ulric): Where shall I say?

Ulric (aside to Rodolph): To Hamburgh.
(aside to himself): That Word will, I think, put a firm padlock on
His further inquisition.

Rodolph: Count, to Hamburgh.
Siegendorf (agitated): Hamburgh! no, I have nought to do there, nor Am aught connected with that city. Then
God speed you!

Rodolph: Fare ye well, Counts Siegendorf!

Exit Rodolph.

Siegendorf: Ulric, this man, who has just departed, is
One of those strange companions, whom I fain
Would reason with you on.127

Ulric: My lord, he is
Noble by birth, of one of the first houses
In Saxony.

Siegendorf: I talk not of his birth,
But of his bearing. Men speak lightly of him.

Ulric: So they will do of most men. Even the monarch
Is not fenced from his chamberlain’s slander, or
The sneer of the last courtier whom he has made
Great and ungrateful.

Siegendorf: If I must be plain,
The world speaks more than lightly of this Rodolph;
They say he is leagued with the “black bands” who still Ravage the frontier.

Ulric: And will you believe
The world?

Siegendorf: In this case – yes.

Ulric: In any case,
I thought you knew it better than to take
An accusation for a sentence.

Siegendorf: Son!
I understand you: you refer to – but
My destiny has so involved about me
Her spider-web, that I can only flutter
Like the poor fly, but break it not. Take heed,
Ulric; you have seen to what the passions led me;
Twenty long years of misery, and famine

127: Compare the King’s disquiet over Hal’s companions in Henry IV.
Quenched them not – twenty thousand more, perchance,
Hereafter (or even here in moments which Might date for years, did anguish make the dial),
May not obliterate or expiate
The madness and dishonour of an instant.
Ulric, be warned by a father! – I was not
By mine, and you behold me!

Ulric: I behold
The prosperous and beloved Siegendorf,
Lord of a prince’s appanage, and honoured
By those he rules, and those he ranks with.

Siegendorf: Ah!
Why wilt thou call me prosperous, while I fear
For thee? Beloved, when thou lovest me not!
All hearts but one may beat in kindness for me –
But if my son’s is cold! –

Ulric: Who dare say that?
Siegendorf: None else but I, who see it feel it – keener
Than would your adversary, who dared say so,
Your sabre in his heart! But mine survives
The wound.

Ulric: You err. My nature is not given
To outward fondling; how should it be so,
After twelve years’ divorcement from my parents?
Siegendorf: And did not I too pass those twelve torn years
In a like absence? But ’tis vain to urge you –
Nature was never called back by remonstrance.
Let’s change the theme. I wish you to consider
That these young violent nobles of high name,
But dark deeds (ay, the darkest, if all rumour Reports be true), with whom thou consortest,
Will lead thee –

Ulric (impatiently): I’ll be led by no man.

Siegendorf: Nor
Be leader of such, I would hope: at once
To wean thee from the perils of thy youth
And haughty spirit, I have thought it well
That thou should’st wed the lady Ida – more,
As thou appear’st to love her.

Ulric: I have said
I will obey your orders, were they to Unite with Hecate – can a son say more?
Siegendorf: He says too much in saying this. It is not
The nature of thine age, nor of thy blood,
Nor of thy temperament, to talk so coolly,
Or act so carelessly, in that which is
The bloom or blight of all men’s happiness,

128: appanage – a parcel of land, often given by the monarch (in Siegendorf’s case, the Austrian Emperor), which could be bequeathed to an heir.
129: Hecate – goddess of witches (though she was not always that).
(For glory’s pillow is but restless if Love lay not down his cheek there): some strong bias,
Some master fiend is in thy service to
Misrule the mortal who believes him slave,
And makes his every thought subservient, else
Thou’st say at once, “I love young Ida, and
Will wed her”, or, “I love her not, and all
The powers of earth shall never make me”. So
Would I have answered.

Ulric: Sir, you wed for love.
Siegendorf: I did, and it has been my only refuge
In many miseries.

Ulric: Which miseries
Had never been but for this love-match.

Siegendorf: Still
Against your age and nature! who at twenty
E’er answered thus till now?

Ulric: Did you not warn me
Against your own example?

Siegendorf: Boyish sophist!
In a word, do you love, or love not, Ida?

Ulric: What matters it, if I am ready to Obey you in espousing her?

Siegendorf: As far
As you feel, nothing, but all life for her.
She’s young – all-beautiful – adores you – is
Endowed with qualities to give happiness,
Such as rounds common life into a dream
Of something which your poets cannot paint,
And (if it were not wisdom to love virtue)
For which philosophy might barter wisdom;
And giving so much happiness, deserves
A little in return. I would not have her
Break her heart for a man who has none to break,
Or wither on her stalk like some pale rose
Deserted by the bird she thought a nightingale,
According to the orient tale.\textsuperscript{131} She is –

Ulric: The daughter of dead Stralenheim, your foe:
I’ll wed her, ne’ertheless; though, to say truth,
Just now I am not violently transported
In favour of such unions.

Siegendorf: But she loves you.

Ulric: And I love her, and therefore would think \textit{twice}.\n
Siegendorf: Alas! Love never \textit{did} so.

Ulric: Then ’tis time
He should begin, and take the bandage from

\textsuperscript{130}: Like Macbeth, who thinks he commands the witches but is in fact ruled by them.
\textsuperscript{131}: See \textit{The Giaour}, 22, B’s note: \textit{The attachment of the nightingale to the rose is a well-known Persian fable – if I mistake not, the “Bulbul of a thousand tales” is one of his appellations.} The love of the bird for the flower is indeed a well-known Persian myth: see \textit{Vathek} (ed. Lonsdale, p.143 / 58n2).
His eyes, and look before he leaps: till now
He hath ta’en a jump i’ the dark.

Siegendorf: But you consent?
Ulric: I did and do.
Siegendorf: Then fix the day.
Ulric: ’Tis usual,
And, certes, courteous, to leave that to the lady.
Siegendorf: I will engage for her.
Ulric: So will not I
For any woman; and as what I fix,
I fain would see unshaken, when she gives
Her answer, I’ll give mine.
Siegendorf: But ’tis your office
To woo.
Ulric: Count, ’tis a marriage of your making,
So be it of your wooing; but to please you
I will now pay my duty to my mother,
With whom, you know, the lady Ida is –
What would you have? You have forbid my stirring
For manly sports beyond the castle walls,
And I obey; you bid me turn a chamberer,
To pick up gloves, and fans, and knitting-needles,\textsuperscript{132}
And list to songs and tunes, and watch for smiles,
And smile at pretty prattle, and look into
The eyes of feminie, as though they were
The stars receding early to our wish
Upon the dawn of a world-winning battle –
What can a son or man do more?

\textit{Exit Ulric.}

Siegendorf (\textit{solus}): Too much!
Too much of duty and too little love!
He pays me in the coin he owes me not:
For such hath been my wayward fate, I could not
Fulfil a parent’s duties by his side
Till now; but love he owes me, for my thoughts
Ne’er left him, nor my eyes longed without tears
To see my child again, and now I’ve found him!
But how! obedient, but with coldness; duteous
In my sight, but with carelessness; mysterious,
Abstracted – distant – much given to long absence,
And where – none know – in league with the most riotous
Of our young nobles; though, to do him justice,
He never stoops down to their vulgar pleasures;\textsuperscript{133}
Yet there’s some tie between them which I cannot Unravel. They look up to him – consult him –

\textsuperscript{132}: Compare \textit{Beppo}, 40, 7-8: Coach, Servants, Gondola, he goes to call, / And carries fan and tippet, gloves, and shawl.
\textsuperscript{133}: Compare again the King’s disquiet over Hal’s companions in \textit{Henry IV}.
Throng round him as a leader: but with me
He hath no confidence! Ah! can I hope it
After – what! doth my father's curse descend
Even to my child? Or is the Hungarian near
To shed more blood, or – oh! if it should be!
Spirit of Stralenheim, dost thou walk these walls
To wither him and his who, though they slew not,
Unlatched the door of death for thee? 'Twas not
Our fault, nor is our sin: thou wert our foe,
And yet I spared thee when my own destruction
Slept with thee, to awake with thine awakening!
And only took – accursed Gold! thou liest
Like poison in my hands; I dare not use thee,
Nor part from thee; thou cam'st in such a guise,
Methinks thou wouldst contaminate all hands
Like mine. Yet I have done, to atone for thee,
Thou villainous gold! and thy dead master's doom,
Though he died not by me or mine, as much
As if he were my brother! I have ta'en
His orphan Ida – cherished her as one
Who will be mine.

Enter an Attendant.

Attendant: The abbot, if it please
Your excellency, whom you sent for, waits
Upon you.

Exit attendant. Enter the Prior Albert.134

Prior Albert: Peace be with these walls, and all Within them!
Siegendorf: Welcome, welcome, holy father!
And may thy prayer be heard! – all men have
Of such, and I –
Prior Albert: Have the first claim to all
The prayers of our community. Our convent,
Erected by your ancestors, is still
Protected by their children.
Siegendorf: Yes, good father;
Continue daily orisons for us
In these dim days of heresies and blood,
Though the schismatic Swede, Gustavus, is Gone home.135
Prior Albert: To the endless home of unbelievers,
Where there is everlasting wail and woe,
Gnashing of teeth, and tears of blood, and fire

134: This scene, in which Werner expresses shame, if not guilt, to his confessor, at an act which he did not commit but for which he was in sense responsible, has no precedent in Lee's The German's Tale.
135: Siegendorf / Werner and his family are Catholics.
Siegendorf: True, father: and to avert those pangs from one,
Who, though of our most faultless, holy church,
Yet died without its last and dearest offices,
Which smooth the soul through purgatorial pains,
I have to offer humbly this donation
In masses for his spirit.

_Siegendorf offers the gold which he had taken from Stralenheim._

Prior Albert: _Count, if I_
Receive it, 'tis because I know too well
Refusal would offend you. Be assured 470
The largess shall be only dealt in alms,
And every mass no less sung for the dead.
Our house needs no donations, thanks to yours,
Which has of old endowed it; but from you
And yours in all meet things 'tis fit we obey;
For whom shall mass be said?136
Siegendorf (faltering): For – for – the dead.
Prior Albert: His name?
Siegendorf: 'Tis from a soul, and not a name,
I would avert perdition.
Prior Albert: I meant not
To pry into your secret. We will pray
For one unknown, the same as for the proudest. 480
Siegendorf: Secret! I have none; but, father, he who’s gone
Might have one; or, in short, he did bequeath
No, not bequeath – but I bestow this sum
For pious purposes.
Prior Albert: A proper deed
In the behalf of our departed friends.
Siegendorf: But he who’s gone, was not my friend, but foe,
The deadliest and the staunchest.
Prior Albert: Better still!
To employ our means to obtain heaven for the souls
Of our dead enemies, is worthy those
Who can forgive them living.
Siegendorf: But I did not 490
Forgive this man. I loathed him to the last,
As he did me. I do not love him now,
But –
Prior Albert: Best of all! for this is pure religion!
You fain would rescue him you hate from hell –
An evangelical compassion! with
Your own gold too!
Siegendorf: Father, 'tis not my gold.

136: CPW has sain rather than said. For sain see Don Juan XVI, Adeline’s song, st.6, 6-7: Then Gramercy! for the Black Friar! / Heaven sain him! fair or foul! To sain was to make the sign of the Cross with a view to exorcising a devil, which is not the meaning here.
Prior Albert: Whose then? you said it was no legacy.
Siegendorf: No matter whose – of this be sure, that he
Who owned it never more will need it, save
In that which it may purchase from your altars:
’Tis yours, or theirs.

Prior Albert: Is there no blood upon it?
Siegendorf: No; but there’s worse than blood – eternal shame!
Prior Albert: Did he who owned it die in his bed?
Siegendorf: Alas!
He did.
Prior Albert: Son! you relapse into revenge,
If you regret your enemy’s bloodless death.
Siegendorf: His death was fathomlessly deep in blood.
Prior Albert: You said he died in his bed, not battle.
Siegendorf: He
Died, I scarce know – but – he was stabbed i’ the dark,
And now you have it – perished on his pillow
By a cut-throat! Aye! you may look upon me!
I am not the man. I’ll meet your eye on that point,
As I can one day, God’s.

Prior Albert: Nor did he die
By means, or men, or instrument of yours?
Siegendorf: No! by the God who sees and strikes!
Prior Albert: Nor know you
Who slew him?
Siegendorf: I could only guess at one,
And he to me a stranger, unconnected,
As unemployed. Except by one day’s knowledge,
I never saw the man who was suspected.
Prior Albert: Then you are free from guilt.
Siegendorf (eagerly): Oh! am I? say!
Prior Albert: You have said so, and know best.
Siegendorf: The truth, and nought but truth, if not the whole:
Yet say I am not guilty! for the blood
Of this man weighs on me, as if I shed it,
Though by the Power who abhorreth human blood,
I did not! nay, once spared it, when I might
And could – aye, perhaps, should, (if our self-safety
Be e’er excusable in such defences
Against the attacks of over-potent foes);
But pray for him, for me, and all my house;
For, as I said, though I be innocent,
I know not why, a like remorse is on me,
As if he had fallen by me or mine. Pray for me,
Father! I have prayed myself in vain.

Prior Albert: I will.
Be comforted! You are innocent, and should
Be calm as innocence.
Siegendorf: But calmness is not
Always the attribute of innocence:
I feel it is not.

Prior Albert: But it will be so,
When the mind gathers up its truth within it.
Remember the great festival tomorrow,
In which you rank amidst our chiefest nobles,
As well as your brave son; and smooth your aspect;
Nor in the general orison of thanks
For bloodshed stopped, let blood, you shed not, rise
A cloud upon your thoughts. This were to be Too sensitive. Take comfort, and forget
Such things, and leave remorse unto the guilty.

Exeunt.
ACT V scene i.

A large and magnificent gothic hall in the castle of Siegendorf, decorated with trophies, banners, and arms of that family. Enter Arnheim and Meister, attendants of Count Siegendorf.

Arnheim: Be quick! the Count will soon return: the ladies Already are at the portal. Have you sent The messengers in search of him he seeks for?

Meister: I have, in all directions, over Prague, As far as the man’s dress and figure could By your description track him. The devil take These revels and processions! All the pleasure (If such there be) must fall to the spectators. I’m sure none doth to us who make the show.

Arnheim: Go to! my lady Countess comes.

Meister: I’d rather Ride a day’s hunting on an outworn jade, Than follow in the train of a great man In these dull pageantries.

Arnheim: Begone! and rail Within.

Exeunt. Enter the Countess Josephine Siegendorf and Ida.

Josephine: Well, Heaven be praised, the show is over!

Ida: How can you say so! Never have I dreamt Of aught so beautiful. The flowers, the boughs, The banners, and the nobles, and the knights, The gems, the robes, the plumes, the happy faces, The coursers, and the incense, and the sun Streaming through the stained windows, even the tombs, Which looked so calm, and the celestial hymns, Which seemed as if they rather came from heaven Than mounted there. The bursting organ’s peal Rolling on high like an harmonious thunder; The white robes, and the lifted eyes; the World At peace! and all at peace with one another! Oh, my sweet mother!

Embracing Josephine.

Josephine: My beloved child!

Ida: Oh!

I am so already. Feel how my heart beats!

137: The name Arnheim occurs at Hare-Naylor II 62 and Coxe IV 109.
138: Compare Blake, Holy Thursday, 10: ... like harmonious thunderings ...
139: A woman, implies B., loves peace more than a man does. The passage conveys a love of the theatricality of Catholic worship. Compare The Winter’s Tale, III i.
Josephine: It does, my love; and never may it throb
With aught more bitter!

Ida: Never shall it do so!
How should it? What should make us grieve? I hate
To hear of sorrow: how can we be sad,
Who love each other so entirely? You,
The Count, and Ulric, and your daughter, Ida:

Josephine: Poor child!
Ida: Do you pity me?

Josephine: No; I but envy,
And that in sorrow, not in the world’s sense
Of the universal vice, if one vice be
More general than another.

Ida: I’ll not hear
A word against a world which still contains
You and my Ulric. Did you ever see
Aught like him? How he towered amongst them all!
How all eyes followed him! The flowers fell faster –
Rained from each lattice at his feet, methought,
Than before all the rest, and where he trod
I dare be sworn that they grow still, nor e’er
Will wither.

Josephine: You will spoil him, little flatterer,
If he should hear you.

Ida: But he never will.
I dare not say so much to him – I fear him.

Josephine: Why so? he loves you well.
Ida, But I can never
Shape my thoughts of him into words to him.
Besides, he sometimes frightens me.

Josephine: How so?
Ida: A cloud comes o’er his blue eyes suddenly,
Yet he says nothing.

Josephine: It is nothing: all men,
Especially in these dark troublous times,
Have much to think of.

Ida: But I cannot think
Of aught save him.

Josephine: Yet there are other men
In the world’s eye, as goodly. There’s, for instance,
The young Count Waldorf, who scarce once withdrew
His eyes from yours today.

Ida: I did not see him,
But Ulric. Did you not see at the moment
When all knelt, and I wept? and yet methought
Through my fast tears, though they were thick and warm,
I saw him smiling on me.

Josephine: I could not
See aught save Heaven, to which my eyes were raised
Together with the people’s.
Ida: I thought too
   Of Heaven, although I looked on Ulric.

Josephine: Come,
   Let us retire; they will be here anon
   Expectant of the banquet. We will lay
   Aside these nodding plumes and dragging trains.

Ida: And, above all, these stiff and heavy jewels,
   Which make my head and heart ache, as both throb
   Beneath their glitter o’er my brow and zone.
   Dear Mother, I am with you.

Exeunt. Enter Count Siegendorf, in full dress, from the solemnity, and Ludwig.

Siegendorf: Is he not found?
Ludwig: Strict search is making every where; and if
   The man be in Prague, be sure he will be found.
Siegendorf: Where’s Ulric?
Ludwig: He rode round the other way
   With some young nobles; but he left them soon;
   And, if I err not, not a minute since
   I heard his Excellency, with his train,
   Gallop o’er the west drawbridge.

Enter Ulric, splendidly dressed.

Siegendorf (to Ludwig): See they cease not
   Their quest of him I have described.

Exit Ludwig.

Oh! Ulric,
   How have I longed for thee!

Ulric: Your wish is granted –
   Behold me!

Siegendorf: I have seen the murderer.
Ulric: Whom? Where?
Siegendorf: The Hungarian, who slew Stralenheim.
Ulric: You dream.
Siegendorf: I live! and as I live, I saw him –
   Heard him! He dared to utter even my name.
Ulric: What name?
Siegendorf: Werner! ’twas mine.
Ulric: It must be so
   No more: forget it.
Siegendorf: Never! never! All
   My destinies were woven in that name:
   It will not be engraved upon my tomb,
   But it may lead me there.
Ulric: To the point – the Hungarian?
Siegendorf: Listen! The church was thronged, the hymn was raised;
Te Deum pealed from nations, rather than
From choirs, in one great cry of “God be praised”
For one day’s peace, after thrice ten dread years,
Each bloodier than the former; I arose,
With all the nobles, and as I looked down
Along the lines of lifted faces, from
Our barded and escutcheoned gallery, I Saw, like a flash of lightning (for I saw
A moment, and no more), what struck me sightless
To all else – the Hungarian’s face; I grew
Sick; and when I recovered from the mist
Which curled about my senses, and again
Looked down, I saw him not. The thanksgiving
Was over, and we marched back in procession.

Ulric: Continue.

Siegendorf: When we reached the Moldau’s bridge,
The joyous crowd above, the numberless
Barks manned with revellers in their best garbs,
Which shot along the glancing tide below,
The decorated street, the long array,
The clashing music, and the thundering
Of far artillery, which seemed to bid
A long and loud farewell to its great doings,
The standards o’er me, and the tramplings round,
The roar of rushing thousands – all – all could not
Chase this man from my mind; although my senses
No longer held him palpable.

Ulric: You saw him
No more, then?

Siegendorf: I looked, as a dying soldier
Looks at a draught of water, for this man;
But still I saw him not; but in his stead –

Ulric: What in his stead?

Siegendorf: My eye for ever fell
Upon your dancing crest; the loftiest,
As on the loftiest and the loveliest head
It rose the highest of the stream of plumes,

140: The implication is that the peace being celebrated is the Treaty of Prague (1635). If this is so, the Thirty Years’ War has another thirteen years to run. Lee (p.276n) has The Peace of Prague, signed May 1635.

141: “From the posture in which he had mechanically continued, the Count was at length roused by the rush of the multitude around, and the grand burst of the Te Deum. He arose with the rest: when, casting his eye, from the elevated situation in which he stood, upon the long though distant line of human faces beneath, he suddenly fancied he saw that of the Hungarian amongst them. – A mist obscured the sight of Siegendorf, and a shock like that of electricity ran through his frame. So deep, indeed, had been the abstraction of his mind, that the revulsion of the senses was almost too mighty for his bodily strength. By a vigorous effort he recovered his powers of perception, and again eagerly looked forward. But the crowd had in the interim moved toward the gates. The sway and pressure caused every space to be immediately occupied by new-comers, nor could the most penetrating gaze ascertain the place or features of an individual!” (Lee, p.313).

142: “The broad expanse of the Moldau was covered with innumerable boats and vessels …” (Lee, p.314).
Which overflowed the glittering streets of Prague.

Ulric: What’s this to the Hungarian?

Siegendorf: Much; for I had almost then forgot him in my son, when just as the artillery ceased, and paused the music, and the crowd embraced in lieu of shouting, I heard in a deep, low voice, distinct, and keener far upon my ear than the late cannon’s volume, this word – “Werner!”

Ulric: Uttered by –

Siegendorf: HIM! I turned – and saw – and fell.¹⁴³

Ulric: And wherefore? Were you seen?

Siegendorf: The officious care of those around me dragged me from the spot, seeing my faintness, ignorant of the cause; you, too, were too remote in the procession (the old nobles being divided from their children) to aid me.

Ulric: But I’ll aid you now.

Siegendorf: In what?

Ulric: In searching for this man, or – when he’s found, what shall we do with him?

Siegendorf: I know not that.

Ulric: Then wherefore seek?

Siegendorf: Because I cannot rest till he is found. His fate, and stralenheim’s, and ours, seem intertwisted; nor can be unravelled, till –

Enter an Attendant.

Attendant: A stranger, to wait on your excellency.

Siegendorf: Who?

Attendant: He gave no name.

Siegendorf: Admit him, ne’ertheless.

The attendant introduces Gabor, and afterwards exit.

Ah!

¹⁴³: Werner / Siegendorf reacted as though it had been he, not Gabor, who killed Stralenheim. “The name of Kruitzner, articulated precisely at this moment, in that low, deep, and deliberate tone which makes itself heard even amidst general clamour, suddenly arrested the attention of the Count. Without sufficient presence of mind to recollect that by recognising the name he identified himself, Siegendorf turned hastily towards the speaker, and within the distance of a very few paces beheld the features of the Hungarian. He was not to be mistaken. He wore the dress of his country, and fixed upon the Count a glance so worldly and alarming as caused the latter to stand upon the defensive. Siegendorf perceiving him again about to escape among the multitude, stretched out his arm to detain him: but the strong emotion of his own mind caused him at the same moment to stagger; and as the accompanying change of countenance announced an indisposition that almost approached to swooning, the action was misconstrued (Lee, p.315-17).
Gabor: 'Tis, then, Werner! Siegendorf (haughtily): The same you knew, Sir, by that name; and you! 144
Gabor (looking round): I recognise you both; father and son,
It seems. Count, I have heard that you, or yours,
Have lately been in search of me: I am here.
Siegendorf: I have sought you, and have found you; you are charged (Your own heart may inform you why) with such
A crime as – (he pauses)
Gabor: Give it utterance, and then
I’ll meet the consequences.
Siegendorf: You shall do so –
Unless –
Gabor: First, who accuses me?
Siegendorf: All things,
If not all men: the universal rumour –
My own presence on the spot – the place – the time –
And every speck of circumstance unite
To fix the blot on you.
Gabor: And on me only?
Pause ere you answer: is no other name,
Save mine, stained in this business?
Siegendorf: Trifling villain!
Who play’st with thine own guilt! Of all that breathe
Thou best dost know the innocence of him
’Gainst whom thy breath would blow thy bloody slander.
But I will talk no further with a wretch,
Further than justice asks. Answer at once,
And without quibbling, to my charge.
Gabor: 'Tis false!
Siegendorf: Who says so?
Gabor: I.
Siegendorf: And how disprove it?
Gabor: The presence of the murderer.
Siegendorf: Name him!
Gabor: He
May have more names than one. Your lordship had so
Once on a time.
Siegendorf: If you mean me, I dare
Your utmost.
Gabor: You may do so, and in safety.
I know the assassin.
Siegendorf: Where is he?
Gabor (pointing to Ulric): Beside you!

144: “‘It is Krautzner;’ again repeated the latter, in a tone of slow and deliberate interrogation” (Lee, p.322).
145: “‘Your people,’ said he, ‘I understand, have made enquiries concerning me: – I am here!’” – (Lee, p.323.
146: “I deny the crime altogether!”
“Upon what ground?”
Ulric rushes forward to attack Gabor; Siegendorf interposes.

Siegendorf: Liar and fiend! but you shall not be slain;
These walls are mine, and you are safe within them.

He turns to Ulric.

Ulric, repel this calumny, as I
Will do. I avow it is a growth so monstrous,
I could not deem it earth-born; but, be calm;
It will refute itself. But touch him not.

Ulric endeavours to compose himself.

Gabor: Look at him, Count, and then hear me.
Siegendorf (first to Gabor, and then looking at Ulric): I hear thee.
   My God! you look –
Ulric:       How?
Siegendorf:    As on that dread night
   When we met in the garden.
Ulric (composes himself):         It is nothing.
Gabor:    Count, you are bound to hear me. I came hither
   Not seeking you, but sought. When I knelt down
   Amidst the people in the church, I dreamed not
   To find the beggared Werner in the seat
   Of senators and princes; but you have called me,
   And we have met.
Siegendorf:    Go on, Sir.
Gabor:    Ere I do so,
   Allow me to inquire who profited
   By Stralenheim’s death? Was’t I – as poor
   And poorer by suspicion on my name.
   The Baron lost in that last outrage neither
   Jewels nor gold; his life alone was sought,
   A life which stood between the claims of others
   To honours and estates, scarce less than princely.
Siegendorf: These hints, as vague as vain, attach no less
   To me than to my son.147
Gabor:     I can’t help that.
   But let the consequence alight on him
   Who feels himself the guilty one amongst us.
   I speak to you, Count Siegendorf, because
   I know you innocent, and deem you just.
   But ere I can proceed – Dare you protect me? –

“Because I know the criminal.”
“Name him!”
“He stands beside you!” – and he pointed to Conrad (Lee, p.325).
147: “‘These,’ said the Count, again fired by interrogations which he felt to be equally fallacious and inconclusive, ‘are surmises that attach no less to myself than to me son’” (Lee, p.327).
Dare you command me?\textsuperscript{148}

Siegendorf first looks at the Hungarian, and then at Ulric, who has unbuckled his sabre and is drawing lines with it on the floor – still in its sheath.\textsuperscript{149}

Ulric (\textit{looks at his father and says}): Let the man go on!

Gabor: I am unarmed, Count – bid your son lay down

His sabre.

Ulric (\textit{offers it to him contemptuously}): Take it.

Gabor: No, Sir, 'tis enough

That we are both unarmed – I would not choose

To wear a steel which may be stained with more

Blood than came there in battle.

Ulric (\textit{casts the sabre from him in contempt}): It – or some

Such other weapon, in my hands – spared yours

Once when disarmed and at my mercy.

Gabor: True –

I have not forgotten it: you spared me for

Your own especial purpose – to sustain

An ignominy not my own.

Ulric: Proceed.

The tale is doubtless worthy the relater.

(to Siegendorf) But is it of my father to hear further?

Siegendorf (\textit{takes his son by the hand}): My son! I know my own innocence – and doubt not

Of yours – but I have promised this man patience;

Let him continue.

Gabor: I will not detain you

By speaking of myself much; I began

Life early – and am what the world has made me.

At Frankfort on the Oder, where I passed

A winter in obscurity, it was

My chance at several places of resort

(Which I frequented sometimes but not often)

To hear related a strange circumstance

In February last. A martial force,

Sent by the state, had after strong resistance

Secured a band of desperate men, supposed

Marauders from the hostile camp. They proved,

However, not to be so – but \textit{banditti},

Whom either accident or enterprise

Had carried from their usual haunt – the forests

Which skirt Bohemia – even into Lusatia.

Many amongst them were reported of

High rank – and martial law slept for a time.

At last they were escorted o'er the frontiers,

\textsuperscript{148}: “… \textit{Dare you protect me? – Dare you enjoin me to proceed?”} (Lee, p.328).

\textsuperscript{149}: “He had detached his sabre from his side, and occupied himself in forming fantastic lines with it on the marble below. Now and then he half unsheathed it, and seemed curiously to examine its polish” (Lee, p.329).
And placed beneath the civil jurisdiction
Of the free town of Frankfort. Of their fate,
I know no more.

Siegendorf: And what is this to Ulric?

Gabor: Amongst them there was said to be one man
Of wonderful endowments – birth and fortune,
Youth, strength and beauty, almost superhuman,
And courage as unrivalled, were proclaimed
His by the public rumour; and his sway
Not only over his associates, but
His judges, was attributed to witchcraft.
Such was his influence – I have no great faith
In any magic save that of the mine –
I therefore deemed him wealthy. But my soul
Was roused with various feelings to seek out
This prodigy, if only to behold him.

Siegendorf: And did you so?

Gabor: You’ll hear. Chance favoured me:
A popular affray in the public square
Drew crowds together – it was one of those Occasions, where men’s souls look out of them,
And show them as they are – even in their faces:
The moment my eye met his, I exclaimed
“This is the man!” though he was then, as since,
With the nobles of the city. I felt sure
I had not erred, and watched him long and nearly:
I noted down his form – his gesture – features,
Stature and bearing – and amidst them all,
Midst every natural and acquired distinction,
I could discern, methought, the assassin’s eye
And gladiator’s heart.150

Ulric (smiling): The tale sounds well.

Gabor: And may sound better. He appeared to me
One of those beings to whom fortune bends
As she doth to the daring – and on whom
The fates of others oft depend; besides,
An indescribable sensation drew me
Near to this man, as if my point of fortune
Was to be fixed by him. There I was wrong.

Siegendorf: And may not be right now.

Gabor: I followed him,
Solicited his notice – and obtained it
Though not his friendship – it was his intention
To leave the city privately – we left it
Together – and together we arrived
In the poor town where Werner was concealed,
And Stralenheim was succoured – now we are on 150: “... I noted down in my memory all those minute characteristics which pass unobserved by common perception; and amid every natural or acquired distinction, I believed I discerned the feelings of a gladiator and the eye of an assassin” (Lee, p.334).

The verge—dare you hear further?

Siegendorf: I must do so—
Or I have heard too much.

Gabor: I saw in you
A man above his station—and if not
So high, as now I find you, in my then
Conceptions—’twas that I had rarely seen
Men such as you appeared in height of mind,
In the most high of worldly rank; you were
Poor—even to all save rags—I would have shared
My purse, though slender, with you—you refused it.

Siegendorf: Doth my refusal make a debt to you,
That thus you urge it?

Gabor: Still you owe me something,
Though not for that—and I owed you my safety,
At least my seeming safety—when the slaves
Of Stralenheim pursued me on the grounds
That I had robbed him.

Siegendorf: I concealed you—I,
Whom, and whose house, you arraign, reviving viper!

Gabor: I accuse no man—save in my defence.
You, Count! have made yourself accuser—judge—
Your hall’s my court, your heart is my tribunal.
Be just, and I’ll be merciful.

Siegendorf: You merciful!
You! Base caluminator!

Gabor: I. ’Twill rest
With me at last to be so. You concealed me—
In secret passages known to yourself,
You said, and to none else. At dead of night,
Weary with watching in the dark, and dubious
Of tracing back my way—I saw a glimmer
Through distant crannies of a twinkling light.
I followed it, and reached a door—a secret
Portal—which opened to the chamber, where,
With cautious hand and slow, having first undone
As much as made a crevice of the fastening,
I looked through, and beheld a purple bed,
And on it Stralenheim!

Siegendorf: Asleep! And yet
You slew him—wretch!

Gabor: He was already slain,
And bleeding like a sacrifice. My own
Blood became ice.\(^{151}\)

Siegendorf: But he was all alone!
You saw none else? You did not see the—

\(^{151}\): “… my hair stood erect on my head, and my blood froze in my veins, when … I saw the body of Stralenheim!” (Lee, pp.341-2).
He pauses from agitation.

Gabor: No, He, whom you dare not name – nor even I Scarce dare to recollect, was not then in
The chamber.

Siegendorf (to Ulric): Then, my boy! thou art guiltless still –
Thou bad’st me say I was so once – Oh! now
Do thou as much!

Gabor: Be patient! I can not
Recede now, though it shake the very walls
Which frown above us. You remember, or
If not, your son does – that the locks were changed
Beneath his chief inspection – on the morn
Which led to this same night: how he had entered,
He best knows – but within an antechamber,
The door of which was half ajar – I saw
A man who washed his bloody hands, and oft
With stern and anxious glance gazed back upon
The bleeding body – but it moved no more.

Siegendorf: Oh! God of Fathers!

Gabor: I beheld his features
As I see yours – but yours they were not, though
Resembling them – behold them in Count Ulric’s!
Distinct – as I beheld them – though the expression
Is not now what it then was – but it was so
When I first charged him with the crime – so lately.

Siegendorf: This is so –

Gabor (interrupting him): Nay – but hear me to the end!
Now you must do so. I conceived myself
Betrayed by you and him (for now I saw
There was some tie between you) into this Pretended den of refuge, to become
The victim of your guilt; and my first thought
Was vengeance: but though armed with a short poignard
(Having left my sword without) I was no match
For him at any time, as had been proved
That morning – either in address or force.
I turned, and fled – ’tis the dark: chance rather than
Skill made me gain the secret door of the hall,
And thence the chamber where you slept – if I
Had found you waking, Heaven alone can tell
What vengeance and suspicion might have prompted;
But ne’er slept guilt as Werner slept that night.

Siegendorf: And yet I had horrid dreams! and such brief sleep –
The stars had not gone down when I awoke –
Why didst thou spare me? I dreamt of my father
And now my dream is out!

Gabor: ’Tis not my fault,
If I have read it. Well! I fled and hid me –
Chance led me here after so many moons
And showed me Werner in Count Siegendorf!
Werner, whom I had sought in huts in vain,
Inhabited the palace of a sovereign!
You sought me, and have found me – now you know
My secret, and may weigh its worth.

Siegendorf: (after a pause): Indeed!

Gabor: Is it revenge or justice which inspires
Your meditation?

Siegendorf: Neither – I was weighing
The value of your secret.

Gabor: You shall know it
At once – when you were poor, and I, though poor,
Rich enough to relieve such poverty
As might have envied mine, I offered you
My purse – you would not share it. I’ll be franker
With you; you are wealthy, noble, trusted by
The Imperial powers – you understand me?

Siegendorf: Yes –

Gabor: Not quite. You think me venal, and scarce true:
’Tis no less true, however, that my fortunes
Have made me both at present; you shall aid me,
I would have aided you – and also have
Been somewhat damaged in my name to save
Yours and your son’s. Weigh well what I have said.

Siegendorf: Dare you await the event of a few minutes’
Deliberation?

Gabor (casts his eyes on Ulric, who is leaning against a pillar). If I should do so?

Siegendorf: I pledge my life for yours. Withdraw into
This tower.

Opens a turret door.

Gabor (hesitatingly): This is the second safe asylum
You have offered me.

Siegendorf: And was not the first so?

Gabor: I know not that even now – but will approve
The second. I have still a further shield.
I did not enter Prague alone – and should I
Be put to rest with Stralenhelm – there are
Some tongues without will wag in my behalf.
Be brief in your decision!

Siegendorf: I will be so.
My word is sacred and irrevocable
Within these walls, but it extends no further.

Gabor: I’ll take it for so much.

---

152: “Conrad, whom it seemed to have roused, awakened to curiosity by the whole of this extraordinary exordium, leant with an undaunted and contemptuous air against the pillar near which he stood” (Lee, p.329 – in the story, this is before Gabor’s tale is told).
Siegendorf (points to Ulric’s sabre, still upon the ground): Take also that—
I saw you eye it eagerly, and him
Distrustfully.

Gabor (takes up the sabre): I will; and so provide
To sell my life—not cheaply.

_Gabor goes into the turret, which Siegendorf closes._

Siegendorf (advances to Ulric): Now, Count Ulric!
For son I dare not call thee— what say’st thou? 400
Ulric: His tale is true.
Siegendorf: True, monster!
Ulric: Most true, Father;
And you did well to listen to it: what
We know, we can provide against. He must Be silenced.
Siegendorf: Aye, with half of my domains;
And with the other half, could he and thou
Unsay this villainy.
Ulric: It is no time
For trifling or dissembling. I have said
His story’s true; and he too must be silenced.
Siegendorf: How so?
Ulric: As Stralenheim is. Are you so dull
As never to have hit on this before?
When we met in the garden, what except
Discovery in the act could make me know
His death? Or had the prince’s household been
Then summoned, would the cry for the police
Been left to such a stranger? Or should I
Have loitered on the way? Or could you, Werner,
The object of the Baron’s hate and fears,
Have fled—unless by many an hour before
Suspicion woke? I sought and fathomed you
Doubting if you were false or feeble; I
Perceived you were the latter; and yet so
Confiding have I found you, that I doubted
At times your weakness.

Siegendorf: Parricide! no less
Than common stabber! What deed of my life,
Or thought of mine, could make you deem me fit
For your accomplice?

Ulric: Father, do not raise
The devil you cannot lay, between us. This
Is time for union and for action, not
For family disputes. While you were tortured
Could I be calm? Think you that I have heard 430

_153_: Compare Polixenes to Florizel at _The Winter’s Tale_ IV iv 409 (app.): _Whom son I dare not call …_
_154_: A Freudian slip. It was his father’s enemy, not his father, whom Ulric slew.
This fellow’s tale without some feeling? You
Have taught me feeling for you and myself;
For whom or what else did you ever teach it?

Siegendorf: Oh! my dead father’s curse! ’tis working now.
Ulric: Let it work on! the grave will keep it down!
Ashes are feeble foes: it is more easy
To baffle such, than countertermine a mole,
Which winds its blind but living path beneath you.
Yet hear me still! If you condemn me, yet
Remember who hath taught me once too often
To listen to him! Who proclaimed to me
That there were crimes made venial by the occasion?
That passion was our nature? That the goods
Of heaven waited on the goods of fortune?
Who showed me his humanity secured
By his nerves only? Who deprived me of
All power to vindicate myself and race
In open day? By his disgrace which stamped
(It might be) bastardy on me, and on
Himself – a felon’s brand! The man who is
At once both warm and weak, invites to deeds
He longs to do, but dare not. Is it strange
That I should act what you could think? We’ve done
With right and wrong; and now must only ponder
Upon effects, not causes. Stralenheim,
Whose life I saved from impulse, as, unknown,
I would have saved a peasant’s or a dog’s, I slew
Known as our foe – but not from vengeance. He
Was a rock in our way which I cut through,
As doth the bolt, because it stood between us
And our true destination – but not idly.
As stranger I preserved him, and he owed me
His life; when due, I but resumed the debt.
He, you, and I stood o’er a gulf wherein
I have plunged our enemy.
You kindled first
The torch – you showed the path; now trace me that
Of safety – or let me!

155: “If your present condemnation of me be just, I have listened to you at least once too often! –
Remember who told me, when at M—, that there were crimes rendered venial by the occasion: who painted the excesses of passion as the trespasses of humanity: who held the balance suspended before my eyes between the goods of fortune and those of honour: who aided the mischief-stirring spirit within me, by showing me a specious probity, secured only by an infirmity of nerves. Had not your own conduct, by stamping you with disgrace, and your son with illegitimacy, deprived me of all power openly to defy Stralenheim, and were you so little skilled in human nature as not to know that the man who is at once intemperate and feeble sanctions the crimes he does not commit? Was it wonderful than that I should dare to act what you dared to meditate? I have nothing now to with its guilt or innocence.
It is our mutual interest to avert its consequences. We stood on a precipice down which one of three must inevitably have plunged: for I knew my own situation with the state to be as critical as yours. – I therefore precipitated Stralenheim! – You held the torch! – You pointed out the path! – Show me now that of safety; or let me show it you!” (Lee, pp.357-8).
Ulric: Let us have done with that which cankers life –
Familiar feuds and vain recriminations
Of things which cannot be undone. We have
No more to learn or hide: I know no fear,
And have within these very walls men whom
(Although you know them not) dare venture all things.
You stand high with the state; what passes here
Will not excite her too great curiosity:
Keep your own secret, keep a steady eye,
Stir not, and speak not – leave the rest to me:
We must have no third babblers thrust between us.

Exit Ulric.

Siegendorf (solus): Am I awake? are these my father’s halls?
And yon – my son? My son! mine! who have ever
Abhorred both mystery and blood, and yet
Am plunged into the deepest hell of both!
I must be speedy, or more will be shed –
The Hungarian’s! Ulric – he hath partisans,
It seems: I might have guessed as much. Oh fool!
Wolves prowl in company. He hath the key
(As I too) of the opposite door which leads
Into the turret. Now then! or once more
To be the father of fresh crimes – no less
Than of the criminal! Ho! Gabor! Gabor!

Exit into the turret, closing the door after him.
Act V scene ii.

The Interior of the turret. Gabor and Siegendorf.

Gabor: Who calls?
Siegendorf: I – Siegendorf! Take these, and fly! Lose not a moment!

Tears off a diamond star and other jewels, and thrusts them into Gabor’s hand.

Gabor: What am I to do
With these?
Siegendorf: Whate’er you will: sell them, or hoard, And prosper; but delay not – or you are lost!
Gabor: You pledged your honour for my safety!
Siegendorf: And Must thus redeem it. Fly! I am not master, It seems, of my own castle – of my own Retainers – nay, even of these very walls, Or I would bid them fall and crush me! Fly! Or you will be slain by –

Gabor: Is it even so?
Farewell, then! Recollect, however, Count, You sought this fatal interview!
Siegendorf: I did. Let it not be more fatal still! – Begone!
Gabor: By the same path I entered?
Siegendorf: Yes; that’s safe still:
But loiter not in Prague – you do not know With whom you have to deal.
Gabor: I know too well –
And knew it ere yourself, unhappy sire!
Farewell!

Exit Gabor.

Siegendorf (solus and listening): He hath cleared the staircase. Ah! I hear
The door sound loud behind him! He is safe!
Safe! Oh, my father’s spirit! I am faint –

He leans down upon a stone seat, near the wall of the tower, in a drooping posture.
Enter Ulric, with others armed, and with weapons drawn.

Ulric: Despatch! – he’s there!
Ludwig: The Count, my Lord!
Ulric (recognising Siegendorf): You here, Sir!
Siegendorf: Yes: if you want another victim, strike!
Ulric (seeing him stripped of his jewels): Where is the ruffian who hath plundered you?
Vassals, dispatch in search of him! You see
'Twas as I said – the wretch hath stripped my father Of jewels which might form a prince’s heirloom! Away! I’ll follow you forthwith.

Exeunt all but Siegendorf and Ulric.

What’s this?

What is the villain?

Ulric: Let us hear no more
Of this: he must be found. You have not let him escape?

Siegendorf: He’s gone.

Ulric: With your connivance?

Siegendorf: With my fullest, freest aid.

Ulric: Then fare you well!

Ulric is going.

Siegendorf: Stop! I command – entreat – implore! Oh, Ulric!
Will you then leave me?

Ulric: What! remain to be denounced – dragged, it may be, in chains; and all
By your inherent weakness, half-humanity,
Selfish remorse, and temporising pity,
That sacrifices your whole race to save
A wretch to profit by our ruin! No, Count,
Henceforth you have no son!

Siegendorf: I never had one;
And would you ne’er had borne the useless name!
Where will you go? I would not send you forth
Without protection.

Ulric: I am not alone; nor merely the vain heir
Of your domains: a thousand, aye, ten thousand
Swords, hearts, and hands, are mine.

Siegendorf: The foresters!
With whom the Hungarian found you first at Frankfort?

Ulric: Yes – men – who are worthy of the name! Go tell
Your senators that they look well to Prague;
Their feast of peace was early for the times;
There are more spirits abroad than have been laid
With Wallenstein!

Enter Josephine and Ida.

Josephine: What is’t we hear? My Siegendorf!
Thank Heav’n, I see you safe!
Siegendorf: Safe!
Ida: Yes, dear father!
Siegendorf: No, no; I have no children: never more
Call me by that worst name of parent.
Josephine: What
Means my good lord?
Siegendorf: That you have given birth
To a demon!
Ida (taking Ulric’s hand): Who shall dare say this of Ulric?
Siegendorf: Ida, beware! there’s blood upon that hand.
Ida: (stooing to kiss it): I’d kiss it off, though it were mine!
Siegendorf: It is so!
Ulric: Away! it is your father’s!

Exit Ulric.

Ida: Oh, great God!
And I have loved this man!

Ida falls senseless – Josephine stands speechless with horror.

Siegendorf: The wretch hath slain
Them both! My Josephine! we are now alone!
Would we had ever been so! All is over
For me! Now open wide, my sire, thy grave;
Thy curse hath dug it deeper for thy son
In mine! The race of Siegendorf is past!

THE END.

156: Ida’s lightning intuition as to what Ulric means enables B. to avoid a page or so of recapitulation.
